A Telephone Call

The telephone awakened her. must have been hours later. na had already grabbed it as ang.

Yes!" Mona's voice showed deep ef.

I thought you'd never call!"

There was a short silence. Alison ening, felt the tension in Mona's ce when she finally spoke.

No! Absolutely not! No!"

ater the girl said: "What time t? So late? We're being ques- ed again at 4. Oh, I'm so glad! en everything is all right?"

There was another long pause.

I am telling you the truth!" ti that, Mona hung up. Deep ef showed in her face. A load med lifted from her heart. At st the shadow in her eyes was so desperate.

'A friend of mine is coming on m New York. I'm so glad!" en for the first time Mona slept. t seemed only five minutes be- e Miss Pringle came to awaken em.

'We'll have something to eat up re and then go to the prose- tor's office."

'To jail?" Mona asked quickly.

'In police headquarters, yes."

'How's Miss Burns?" asked Ali- n.

'You might speak to her. She ems quieter," the policewoman id.

Alison stepped to the door be- een the two rooms. Suddenly she reamed and ran. That cry brought iss Pringle with a rush. It was lie. She was at the window. ogether they dashed, just in time keep her from jumping out.

'I want to die!" cried the girl they dragged her back from the ndow ledge and put her on the d.

CHAPTER XVI

The offices of Prosecutor William hurber stretched along the est side of police headquarters, ening one into the other.

Into those offices came the five assengers and the crew of the Death Ship," as the newspapers ere calling Continental's night lane for Chicago. Terry, Steve and lison were left together with Pro- utor William Thurber. The rest aited in connecting offices.

The handsome red leather chairs nd davenport the walnut desk ere so sumptuous that Alison could ot realize they were facing a police nquiry.

Inspector Splane was there, and everal detectives. Data, papers rawings were piled on Thurber's esk. He was a small, rotund man ith sleepy eyes and a large voice.

"Not very clever," Alison decided. hat is until he began to ask ques- ions.

"What about that broken bottle in he wastebasket of the ship, Miss Thayer?"

"Miss Kilroy broke a perfume ottle and cut her hand. I treated the cut. Then I threw the broken ottle away."

"Where did that happen?"

"Not long before we got into Buf- alo."

"How long would you say?"

Sonny's Story

Alison tried to remember. How ong had she been sitting uo fron', how long after they left Bellefonte? "It is hard to remember, I am so confused."

"Take your time."

"I think it was about half an hour out of Buffalo, maybe longer."

"Now let's begin at the beginning. When you got on the ship at Newark where was Mrs. Roerden?"

"She was in her berth, sleeping."

"Did you see her or speak to her?"

"When we were ready to take off I stopped by her berth, fastened her safety belt. She told me she was tired and not to awaken her until we got almost to Chicago."

"Did you turn on the light?"

"No, I didn't, because the belt was so I could reach it without. I didn't want to disturb her any more than necessary."

"How long did you stand there?"

"Not more than a minute. Probably less."

"And did you speak to her again?"

"No."

"Now just what happened as you came into Buffalo?"

Alison tried to remember. "First, Mr. Burke came up forward and said he was going to get off and walk about. The odor of perfume was pretty strong in the ship."

"Then what?"

"Then Mr. Radman got up, too. I think I noticed Miss Kilroy next. She apologized again about the perfume and she got off, too. We had a ten-minute stopover there."

"Where did she go?"

"Into the waiting room."

"Could you see where she went in there?"

"I couldnt. Probably for a cup of coffee. They usually do, just to kill time."

"And who else got off?"

So it went, for hours, a stenographer taking down the whole proceedings. The prosecutor asked Terry and Steve the same questions. It seemed so unless. Alison was getting restless and angry. "Now if you will just wait in the next office," Thurber said finally.

Mona was next. Thurber kept her for a long time. She came out and joined the three, looking pale and tired. She kept consulting her awtch. Alison knew she was wondering where her friend was. Bradley, Miss Burns, Lefty and Radman all had their turn with Thurber.

Stranger Arrives

It was getting dark It must have been 6 o'clock when a well-dressed, handsome man of 50 came into the room with Thurber.

"Here is Mr. Scott, Miss Kilroy. He wants to talk to you."

Mona's face lighted up. Tears came to her eyes. Alison thought she saw a warning in Scott's face.

"Certainly you are well represented by Mr. Scott, Miss Kilroy," Thurber said.

"I'd like to see my client alone, if I may."

"That can be arranged later."

Thurber seemed to be smiling behind his sleepy eyes. "These young people can tell you what happened. They'll tell you the details. I have so much to do to get ready for the Ccroner's inquest. If you'll excuse me——"

Thurber turned and went back into his private office where Radman was now sitting The powerful underworld figure sat ther, impassive. Thurber smiled.

"I thought Scott was coming here for you when he sent in his card. That's why I saw him."

"I don't need Scott."

"How does Miss Kilroy rate him?" Thurber asked.

Radman shook his head. "All this is too much for me."

Thurber sat in silence for a little, watching Radman. "Radman, what is this all about? Why was that woman killed?"

"I haven't the least idea."

"You're lying!"

"I'd expect you to say that. How was she killed?"

"We'll come to that later. Such complete innocence does not become you!"

"I know my being aboard is great for the newspapers, Thurber. I came here with my bodyguard to talk to some of my Detroit friends who wanted me to finance a brewery for them. They had a license, I had the money. I can give you their names. Their chauffeur was waiting to take me to them."

"Why the late ship? The sudden change in plans?"

"We got caught in traffic at Times Square and missed the 11 o'clock train I wanted to be here for this morning, so we flew."

"Too pat."

"It happens to be true. Check it."

"I have."

"Then you know it is true.'

"So far as it goes."

Male Chorus Give Fine Performance

It was to be regretted that the audience was not large at the Summerside High School auditorium on Tuesday evening, for the very excellent performance put on by the Charlottetown Male Chorus.

The boys came up in response to a request by the I.O.O.F. of Summerside, who put on the program in aid of expenses for the Grand Lodge visitation in August.

There were thirty-four voices in the cast under the direction of Mr. Dennis. Dr. Leonard, comedian, gave some very excellent numbers. There were some very fine solo numbers by different members of the cast.

Those who attended said the whole program was very high class and deserved a larger audience.

Cotton - exporting Nations Asked To Attend Conference

WASHINGTON, May 31—(AP)—The United States asked 10 major cotton-exporting nations today to participate in an international conference at Washington Sept. 5 to consider the possibility of a world cotton marketing agreement.

Countries to which invitations have been issued by the State Department, in behalf of agriculture secretary Wallace, include:—

Great Britain, for its exporting colonies, France for the French exporting colonies; Egypt, India, Mexico, Peru, Sudan, Soviet Russia, Argentina and Brazil.

Wallace has suggested that these nations draft a world agreement dividing export markets "equitably" among all exporting countries.

He also has suggested that cotton countries control production to prevent accumulation of price-depressing surpluses.

Parliament To Be Modelled On Fascist Lines

BUCHAREST, May 31—(AP)—Rumania's last piece of democratic political machinery will be discarded tomorrow in the election of a corporate parliament, modelled on Italian Fascist lines.

Two million voters will be asked to approve lists of candidates submitted by Rumania's only party, the front of national rebirth which King Carol II created last year to rule unopposed under his guidance.

With political campaigning stifled and the result of the elections a foregone conclusion, public interest was at a low ebb. Only the Chamber of Deputies will be elected by the voters at large, divided into corporations or guilds according to their type of employment.

Carol's admiration for the Fascist system, however, observers stated, does not mean that the monarch always sees eye to eye with Premier Mussolini of Italy.

Approximately half the senate is to be chosen by 1,000 guild directors Friday. The rest will be named Monday by Carol.

This Is Important!

Railway arrangements have been made whereby all regular trains on the Island will be run early to reach the City in ample time for passengers to see the Royal party arrive. All trains will also be held until after the Royal Party leaves the City. Station Agents can supply information regarding cost of tickets which are on the same special basis as elsewhere during the Royal Tour.

It is suggested that children bring lunches, which will also be available at restaurants and in boxes at Victoria Park and elsewhere, at reasonable cost.

Details as to Parking areas, childrens' special space, etc., will be printed and distributed in a few days.

WARM TRIBUTE

R. Cruikshank, Mr. Hyndman's successor as branch manager who unfortunately was absent through illness. Mr. Tweedy also referred to letters received from all the branch managers of the Royal Bank in the Province.

Grace was said by Rev. Dr Moorhead Legate.

The large attendance, Premier Campbell declared amid applause, was a very eloquent tribute to the respect with which Mr. Hyndman is held in the city and throughout the Province.

Lt. Governor DeBlois

"I am indeed very happy to be with you tonight on this occasion, and to join with the citizens of this City and Province in doing honour and in paying tribute to the sterling qualities of one of our most esteemed citizens, our good friend Mr. Hyndman," said Lieutenant Governor DeBlois

"We are indeed proud to be able to claim him as an eminent son of Prince Edward Island, whose family have been associated with the public life, and with the business and social life, of the Province for very many years. After forty-three years of connection with the Royal Bank, Mr. Hyndman is about to enter upon his well-merited retirement. He leaves behind him an enviable record of faithful and distinguished service in the banking profession, and of duty well done as a citizen and friend.

"The Royal Bank of Canada has played a very prominent part in the progress and development of this great country of ours," His Honour continued. "The splendid reputation that this Bank enjoys today, and the strong financial position it occupies in the business world, may very well be attributed not only to its sound policies but to the splendid cooperation, the faithfulness and the vision, of men associated with the Bank of the calibre of our good friend Mr. Hyndman.

"He enters upon his retirement with the deserved admiration, affection and good-will of not only the clients of the Royal Bank of Canada, but of all those who know him and who are privileged to enjoy the warmth of his friendship.

"My sincere wish is that he may long live to enjoy his well-earned retirement, and I hope that good health and happiness will follow him and his gracious and charming partner, Mrs. Hyndman, who has endeared herself to all our people in a very special way since coming to this city some years ago."

His Worship Mayor Foster then read the following address:

TEXT OF ADDRESS

Mr. Alexander W. Hyndman, retiring Manager of the Royal Bank of Canada,

Dear Mr. Hyndman:

At midnight tonight you will have completed forty-three years of faithful service with the Royal Bank of Canada. With the end of the month of May, your connection with that great financial institution also comes to an end.

On the eve of your retirement on superannuation, your friends and clients of the bank meet here to pay tribute to you, both as a banker and a citizen. We do so with mixed feelings. Whilst we regret that the pleasant relations which have existed between banker and clients are being severed, nevertheless we feel sure that you will enjoy that well earned rest which the late Ramsay Macdonald said was one of the most elusive forms of happiness.

We trust that it will be many years before any of us read your obituary, but it is fitting that the public should know that your career has not only been long but notable.

Entering the service in Charlottetown in 1896 and receiving your preliminary training before going to Montreal in 1902, in less than a year you were transferred to the Far West, and from that time on, your promotion was rapid.

1905 found you Manager of the Cumberland, British Columbia, branch and later you held the same position in Nelson, British Columbia, and Edmonton, Alberta, where you opened the branch there.

In September 1909 you became Manager of the Charlottetown branch and have occupied that position, with the exception of three years which you spent in Halifax as Assistant Supervisor of the Maritime Branches.

This record speaks louder than any words of ours of your ability, courtesy, dependability and popularity.

Not only have you met the rigid requirements of the bank, but you have also won the high regard and esteem of its clients.

Whilst having the courage to say "no" when the occasion demanded, at the same time, being a shrewd judge of human nature—as all good bankers are—you have never caused undue hardship to deserving clients so far as extensions of credit were concerned. To many, too, you have given valuable and helpful advice, and although sometimes it may have been a case of being cruel to be kind, we know that disappointment brought no resentment.

Community Interests

Not only have you risen to a high position in banking circles in the Maritimes and other parts of Canada, but you have found time to give generously of your business training and sound financial judgment to many worthy causes.

As an elder of St. James Church, as Vice-President of the Charlottetown Board of Trade, as a charter member of the Rotary Club, as an active member of the Fish and Game Association, you have rendered most praiseworthy service.

Though a veteran in banking experience, you are still blessed with health and strength, and still keenly interested in the great adventure of life.

It is our earnest and sincere wish that for many years you may yet enjoy your favourite recreations of fishing, shooting and curling, while continuing to play the active part in community activities which you have always played.

In your work on behalf of civic welfare, and in the social sphere, Mrs. Hyndman and family have been associated with you, and we ask you to convey to them also our best wishes for continued health, happiness and contentment.

In conclusion, we ask you to accept this gift as a token of the cordial relations existing between us during your years of faithful service in Charlottetown.

Your Friends and Clients at The Royal Bank of Canada.

Charlottetown.
Prince Edward Island.
May 31, 1939.

Mr. Hyndman's Reply

Mr. Hyndman, in reply, spoke feelingly of his pleasant associations with the business life of the community and gave interesting details of his early career in Charlottetown as a junior employee of the Bank, which was then known as the Merchants Bank of Halifax.

The first savings account opened in Charlottetown, he recalled, was in his handwriting.

He also gave some anecdotes of his banking experience in other parts of Canada.

In conclusion he expressed regret that his successor, Mr. Cruikshank, was absent on account of illness, and spoke warmly of his ability and experience.

Solos by Mr. Charles Earle was a much appreciated feature of the dinner function, at which instrumental music was supplied by Mr. Blanchard's orchestra.

It closed with the hearty singing of "He's A Jolly Good Fellow" and the National Anthem.

General Manager's Tribute

Following is the text of the telegram received from Mr. S.G. Dobson, General Manager of the Royal Bank:

"George J. Tweedy, Charlottetown.

"On the occasion which you and other friends are celebrating tonight, the retirement of A. W. Hyndman from active management of our Charlottetown branch, I desire to tender him my congratulations on the completion of an eminently satisfactory career and to express the hope that he will long be spared to enjoy well earned leisure. Mr. Hyndman has been connected with the Bank since 1896 and has been manager of Charlottetown branch for nearly twenty-eight years. He enjoyed to an unusual degree the full confidence of our directors and executive during his entire term of office. Our relations with him both officially and personally were always of a most pleasant character. On relinquishing the duties of manager of Charlottetown branch we shall lose a worthy representative and one whose high character has reflected most creditably on the Bank. Our best wishes go to him and to Mrs. Hyndman."

From Mr. Frank B. Common, K. C., of the Montreal Trust Company, came the following wire: "Please convey to Mr. Hyndman my heartiest congratulations on a long and successful career with the Royal Bank of Canada and to yourself and your guests my regrets at not being able to be present."

guard her frontiers. Our attitude is serious. We will defend those frontiers as firmly as our own. It is time to understand that all patience has a limit."

Molotoff epitomized the foreign situation as follows:—

Italy and Germany are in a mood to brag about their successes, while France and Britain on the other hand have been trying to minimize these "to pacify public opinion by making believe nothing has happened."

The Soviet position differs from both of these. Molotoff said:

"The Soviet Union is beyond suspicion of sympathy with aggressors, but it wants the facts given to the public. We want peace, but we must remember Stalin's warning about pulling chestnuts out of the fire."

Molotoff said Russia is lending aid to China. He recalled Stalin's words to the Party Congress in March about aiding victims of aggression and said of China: "We are carrying out his words with deeds."

He also touched on the question of the Aaland Islands, which guard Russia's outlet to the Baltic Sea. The League of Nations Council adjourned on May 27 without passing on a Finnish-Swedish proposal to re-fortify the islands, to which Russia had objected. Molotoff today referred to Finland's refusal to give information as to the purpose and extent of the proposed fortifications.

A Step Forward

Commenting on British recognition of mutual assistance on a basis of reciprocity, Molotoff said:

"This of course is a step forward, but it should be noted that it is hedged around by such reservations—even to the extent of a reservation regarding certain clauses in the League of Nations covenant—that it may prove to be a fictitious step forward."

He added, "while conducting negotiations with Great Britain and France, we by no means consider it necessary to renounce business relations with countries like Germany and Italy."

After remarking that "it is not unlikely" that trade negotiations would be resumed with Germany, Molotoff said: "I may also add that a trade agreement for the year 1939, advantageous to both countries, was recently concluded with Italy."

Molotoff declared that Soviet Union "cannot assume obligations" in regard to the countries guaranteed by Britain and France unless it receives a guarantee in regard to the three countries on its northwestern frontier."

He added "that is how matters stand regarding negotiations with Britain and France."

PARIS, May 31—(AP)—Foreign Commissar Vyacheslaff Molotoff's criticism of the French-British proposals for a mutual assistance pact dealt a rude shock to France today, but diplomatic sources said fresh efforts would be made to bring Russia into the London-Paris camp.

Moscow's formal reply to the French-British plan following Molotoff's address was expected in these quarters to be given in a note tomorrow to Paris and London. Meanwhile, official quarters declined to make any direct comment.

From conversations with Jakob Surits, the Soviet Ambassador, the Foreign Minister had formed the impression Russia would accept the principle of a tri-power mutual assistance agreement with France and Britain.

Molotoff's reference to these proposals as "insufficient," however, indicated Russia would demand some reinforcement, at least of some of the articles of the proposed pact, before signing up.

The articles to which the Soviet particularly objected in the proposed treaty were understood to be:—

1. The clause linking the pact to the League of Nations which might be interpreted as requiring consultation at Geneva before taking action to resist any aggression.

2. The clause calling for consultation instead of providing direct and automatic support for the Baltic states bordering the U.S.S.R.

The forthcoming negotiations were expected in these quarters to be "delicate" but designed to "dissipate misunderstandings."

(By The Associated Press)

BERLIN, May 31—Nazis interpreted the speech of Premier-Foreign Minister Molotoff to the Supreme Soviet today as a setback for Great Britain and France and an encouragement to Germany and Italy.

Whether Germany immediately would follow up Molotoff's intimation that Russia was not turning a deaf ear to a better understanding between Communists and National Socialists was not clear from the first reaction here.

More conservative quarters at the Foreign Office said Molotoff's apparent coolness toward Britain and France might be just a "diplomatic manoeuvre" and that snap predictions as to what the future might bring forth were dangerous.

Rejection Of Proposals Surprising

(By The Associated Press)

LONDON, May 31—Hopes that Soviet Russia can be brought into the Anglo-French bloc suffered a severe jolt tonight as a result of Moscow's surprise rejection of Britain's latest proposals.

Some saw a ray of hope in the fact that the Soviet Premier and Foreign Commissar, Vyachesloff Molotoff, who announced the rejection in Moscow, did not rule out further negotiations.

The implications of his speech before the Soviet Parliament were closely studied.

His declaration came as a complete surprise to British officials, who had been expressing confidence for the past week that they had evolved a formula—with the help of France—which would meet Russia's approval.

Paris dispatches showed Russia's stand was just as much a surprise in the French capital, where the foreign ministry declined immediate comment.

British officials took note of Molotoff's statement that negotiations might continue, but his assertion that "we insist on our own point of view" was interpreted as meaning Britain would have to accept Soviet proposals or there would be no pact.

One high official, however, expressed the view that Molotoff's move might be "horse trading" to get better terms.

Whether Britain was prepared to continue negotiations and offer still further concessions had not been decided. No decision was expected to be made before Prime Minister Chamberlain returns from a fishing trip and Foreign Secretary Viscount Halifax comes back from a holiday in the country.

Tie-up Will Not Affect Delivery

(By The Canadian Press)

YARMOUTH, N. S., May 31—Lobster fishermen of this western Nova Scotia port learned today their lobsters would be delivered to the New England market despite a tie-up of Eastern Steamship Lines vessels in Boston because of wage differences between management and crewmen.

The fishermen had feared they would lose more than $25,000 when the regular steamship service between Boston and Yarmouth was tied up because of the strike and no other vessels were available to handle the cargo. The season ended tonight, and regulations forbid possession of lobsters after Friday.

Because of the hold-up, however, fisheries authorities suspended the regulation. Yarmouth lobster dealers succeeded in chartering a vessel, the Anna D., capable of carrying about one third of the estimated 1,400 crates now ready for shipment. She will make at least three trips.
