CANADA HOLDS OWN IN CHEESE MARKETS

No Improvement, However, in Processes and Marketing can be Overlooked—Women and Dairy

In the area of industrial labor it is in the dairy and poultry yard where women and girls shine the most. In the ancient days, apart from the interior of the home and works of charity, in civilized countries, those two branches of agriculture represented practically their only spheres of non-household activity. To-day there is not a walk in life in which they have not some sort of footing not even excepting the iron foundries, but still in the dairy and in the poultry yard they find their most congenial and most healthy agricultural occupation. It is on them that, especially in the dearth of manhood, will to a large extent fall the responsibility for the increase of Canada's dairy products.

New Zealand a Rival

Canadian cheese has for more than a generation possessed a reputation that even the long-famous home products of the central counties of England have difficulty in equalling, despite the much longer experience of the manufacturing families. Of recent years New Zealand, notwithstanding its greater distance from the centre of demand, has been pushing this country hard. The products of that partner in the vast British aggregation have, indeed, at times commanded slightly better prices, but on the whole the cheese of this country has maintained its supremacy. And the market is increasing and is bound to continue progressive. That New Zealand recognizes this fact is abundantly proven by the conversion that took place there of butter-making establishments into cheese factories.

Canada is not lagging behind it is satisfactory to be able to state. That she, too, awakened to the opportunity for magnifying trade that confronted her was proven by the increased output of 1915 as compared with previous years; was proven particularly by the progressive movement that has been going forward in the Western provinces. But the ground has not altogether been covered yet. The market is still open, is still only partially occupied as far as our products are concerned. No matter how hard we may strive to secure excellence in flavor and general character our efforts can never prove excessive.

THE FLOWER BORDER

It is best to locate the flower border at the side or back of the lawn, rather than make it too prominent a feature in the front yard. It shows to best advantage against a background of shrubbery, or near a building or fence, which can be covered with vines and climbers. The size of the border need be limited only by the extent of the grounds and the time that they can be put upon it. A border with irregular outline varying from five to ten feet in width is preferable to a narrow one between straight boundary lines. The ground for the flower border should be prepared deeply and thoroughly, and be made as rich as possible by digging in plenty of well rotted manure or compost. The work of stocking a border may be done at various times throughout the season. Early in the spring is the best time to sow seeds, and do most of the planting; the transplanting of seedlings may be done at any time during the season when the ground is moist. Hardy bulbs and tuberous rooted plants should be planted in the fall.
