THE HANDSOME MAN

"Sit down, Sir Georgie," she said with an air of command that somehow seemed natural to her. "Have you engagements or will you dine with me? I've a deal to say."

"I'll dine with you gladly," Sir Georgie found himself saying. He was amazed at himself, or was it that Lady Sandison? It was the last thing he had contemplated, but since there was no way out now, he would continue at least to look as though duty and pleasure went hand in hand.

"Would an early dinner discommode you?"

"It would not. I would be glad to have it early. I've been travelling since morning."

"That'll suit me fine. I'll ring for the dinner now, and then we'll get to our talking."

She rang the bell and looked again at her stepson.

Sir Georgie frowned, but before he could voice his evident annoyance, the woman spoke again.

"I've been wanting to tell you several things for a long while past. But they were not such things as could be put on paper, so I had to bide in patience until I could get at you, so to speak."

The maid appeared again, and was briefly told to see about the dinner at once. "Sir Georgie is dining with me."

The maid gave a pleased stare at Lady Sandison with her "Yes m'lady" which led Sir Georgie to surmise correctly that she had been taken, at least a short distance, into Lady Sandison's confidence.

But Aggy, Lady Sandison, never took anyone too far into her confidence. She had confided to the landlady through the maid, that the young man was expected. She had also hinted that she might "have him to dinner if he was not that engaged that he hadn't a minute to spare, even for a stepmother." She had further added: "And I have that much to talk about with him, that in case we have not got through by midnight, I'll be asking you to leave sheets and blankets in the press here, so I can make up the couch in the sitting room for myself, if I can persuade the poor tired lad to rest here."

The landlady, who had found Lady Sandison "near" but just, had agreed to this, picturing to herself from m'lady's confidences some pale, tired lad of fifteen or sixteen.

The sheets, blankets and pillow cases were that moment deposited on the top shelf of the press in the sitting room and the shrewd Lady Sandison determined they should be used, though this Sir Georgie did not guess. He was even then, his dinner having been provided by Providence, wondering where he would lay his head, yet retain his seven and six for breakfast in the morning, until he could borrow money enough to start anew.

Again Lady Sandison upset her stepson's calculations, for she faced him and said:

"You must have often wondered what made me marry your father."

His father's son blushed, as he remembered that father, and then said guiltily:

"I never wonder at marriages. The reasons why are never clear to an outsider."

"I wouldn't exactly call you an outsider."

"Everybody except the parties to a marriage is an outsider," Sir Georgie insisted. He was becoming a little annoyed with Aggy. He was remembering now that as his nurse, long years ago, she had been awfully set on having her way, and would argue with the small boy he had been until she got it.

"My father was old enough—" he began again.

"Your father was an old fool. We both knew that," admitted Aggy with the awful directness that had always distinguished her, and using more markedly plebeian terms of expression than before. Evidently when Aggy grew excited or emotional, caution left her. "But what you do not understand is that he would have made a far worse fool of himself if I hadn't interfered. He was fair determined to marry that young brazen hussy, Jock Heath's daughter, Meggy, if I wouldn't have him. It was my thought that there would be less trouble and expense for you if he married me, a wiselike woman, of sense and middle age, than a young hussy that would make the money fly—and what was left of the estate."

"Aggy!" gasped her stepson.

"That's more like it," Lady Sandison said, with a satisfied look.

"Keep to Aggy, Sir Georgie, and you'll not get far wrong. It's your own old Aggy with an eye to your future, that married your father and if I do say it, kept him in order for the last of his days."

Aggy grew solemn. "They were fewer than I thought they would be when I took on the job. He was a grand man, Sir Steenie was, and I was set up that he should choose me. He was sober the day we were married. I saw to that myself," she continued with an air of conscious recititude. "My conscience! It was an awful-like honeymoon! He started in when he reached Gies'g, and he was still at it, when, after running over the city half the night, I got him back to his hotel and then on the train for Sandisree. Save us! When he got there!" She shook her head. "Well, I kept him alive for more than a year, and the doctor himself said it was a wonder that he lasted a week. His end was very peaceful after he got over the idea that he had that he was being chased by Robert Bruce's spider—and all his family." She looked at Sir Georgie with a kind of triumph in her eye.

"He was an extraordinary man, grand even in the D. T's! He couldn't even have a delirium like anybody else."

"I was fond of him," she said simply. "In spite of all, I was a proud woman that he selected me to be his second, and however you have felt toward him and me, Sir Georgie, you must mind I did it for your best interests, and he was an extraordinary man."

"I think," Sir Georgie told her, "it is you who are an extraordinary woman," he hesitated and then said it, "Lady Sandison."

"Oh, not that from you, Sir Georgie," she cried, and then stretched out a timid, pudgy, capable hand toward him. "Could we not be friends, we two? There's a heap I would like to speak to you about, and indeed there's nothing I wouldn't do for you. You were my own wee laddie when I took care of you."

Sir Georgie looked at her with an embarrassed air. "You make it hard for me, Lady."

"Aggy to you," declared Lady Sandison promptly. "You called me that when I was your nurse girl, and I'm still wanting to look after you."

"Aggy" he began, after a moment's hesitation.

The maid came in with the cloth and began to set the table, and Sir Georgie watched somberly. What was it in life that caught one and drew one toward the very people one hoped to avoid? He had come, only because of the duty he owed his father's widow, to see her once and be done with her forever—and he found he liked Aggy. It was preposterous, but it was true. This was the woman he had cursed many a day, many a night, and he was dining with her!

Lady Sandison hesitated a moment when the maid left the room, and then went resolutely to where she had caused the extra blankets and sheets to be stored, and came back with a bottle of wine.

He stopped her as she was about to pour out a glass for him.

TREATMENT FOR SUNSCALD IN PIGS

(Experimental Farms Note)
Every year in many sections of Canada sunscald or blistering of the skin of pigs causes heavy losses to swine raisers. The affected pigs suffer severe pain and quickly become unthrifty and growth is retarded. As a result of the lowering of vitality the pigs are much more susceptible to attacks by parasites and contagious diseases. Sunscalded pigs are very slow to finish and require many more pounds of meal for a pound of gain and are often fed at a loss.

Many litters are scalded at weaning time and the little pigs should be left in the sun for only short periods until their skin becomes hardened. Young growing pigs are frequently sunscalded if turned into alfalfa or rape pasture wet with rain or dew during hot weather. Yorkshire pigs, being white, are more susceptible to sunscald than the red or black breeds, but pigs of all breeds will suffer if too much exposed or if in an unthrifty condition. The best preventives are to expose the little pigs gradually to the sun and to keep all the pigs in a thrifty rapidly growing condition. Provision of shelter so that the pigs may rest in the shade in the heat of the day tends to minimize the trouble. The all year hog cabin which is also valuable as a winter shelter, or a raised framework of boughs covered with sods or straw will provide the necessary shelter from the sun.

Experience at the Dominion Experimental Station, Lacombe, Alberta, indicates that pigs suffering from "sunscalding" or "blistering" due to outdoor conditions may be successfully treated by applying a mixture made up of two pounds of sulphur, eight ounces of oil of tar and one gallon of raw linseed oil. The mixture is heated and applied quite warm to the pigs backs, shoulders and sides by means of a stiff brush or broom. On application will usually show marked results but more may be necessary. In summer, exposure to the hot sun immediately after oiling will often result in further blistering and two or three days should elapse before the treated hogs are again turned out to pasture. Used tractor and automobile oil have been used to advantage as a curative treatment for sunscald but these have not proven to be as effective in the control of this condition as has the above mentioned mixture.

H. E. Wilson, Dominion Experimental Station, Lacombe, Alberta.

HARDY ROSES IN BLOOM IN JUNE

(By Isabella Preston, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa.)

Most of the hardy roses that flower in June only bloom once, therefore they should not be planted in a formal rose garden. They are perhaps better classed as flowering shrubs and have a place as the boundary of a formal garden or amongst shrubbery. As these roses can be left undisturbed for years the ground should be well and deeply dug and well rotted manure mixed with the soil before planting. The plants can be put in either in spring or fall and if they are on their own roots they will spread by suckers and make fine clumps in a few years. They need very little care, except weeding, and are not susceptible to disease or insect pests. The varieties mentioned here are hardy at the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, without protection.

Harrison's Yellow is the well known yellow rose so often seen in old gardens. Seedlings of this originated at the Experimental Farm, Ottawa, have proved equally hardy. Orinda is one of the best and has cream colored flowers and make very attractive bushes. One that blooms all summer is Stanwell's Perpetual. Two varieties originated at the Experimental Farm which belong to this class have been named Huron and Iroquois.

Betty Bland, which has reddish bark and pink flowers and very few thorns, is a seedling originated by Mr. Skinner, Morden, Manitoba.

Rugosa hybrids are very useful for Canadian conditions. The species rubra and alba are beautiful in flower and in fruit. Many of the hybrids do not set seed, but have finer flowers than in the species. Agnes and Grace, two varieties originated by the late Dr. Wm. Saunders, have amber colored flowers. F. J. Grootendorst is a perpetual bloomer. It winter kills a little at Ottawa but blooms on new growth. It is red and there is a pink form also. Hans and Rocco-rale de l'Hay are red. Blanc Double de Coubert and Souvenir de Philippe Cochet are white and have a long blooming season.

Rubrosa variety Carmenetta is a large growing shrub with reddish foliage and clusters of pink flowers. This was originated at the Experimental Farm, Ottawa and is very hardy.

Two species that should be grown where space permits are R. rubrifolia with red leaves and clusters of small red blossoms. R. spinosissima altaica has a large single cream flower.

BEDUQUE

Miss Bernice Sharpe, of Borden, is spending an enjoyable holiday with relatives and friends in Norboro.

Haying operations have been commenced in these districts, although not much progress has yet been made owing to the rain, which has been showering the country almost every day. No doubt the rain has helped to thicken the hay crop considerably and what at one time threatened to be light, has turned out much better than expected a few weeks ago. Although the crop is not to be compared with 1931, it will prove a fair amount. The hay seems very green and unmaturing for the time of year. The root crops are doing splendidly under those refreshing showers.

Mrs. (Dr.) MacPhail, formerly of Summerside, but who has been residing in Montreal for a number of years, is spending her vacation at Centreville Beduque, the welcome guest at the home of Dr. A. D. and Mrs. Sharpe.

Mr. and Mrs. John Campbell, of Boston, Mass., have been spending a short vacation with relatives and old friends in Norboro.

Miss Patricia Gillis, of Emerald, has been spending a very enjoyable holiday in South Melville, the welcome guest of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Malone.

The Beduque and Freetown Troop of Boy Scouts have recently completed a very pleasant camping holiday at Mr. Harrison MacFarlane's shore in Fernwood. This Troop has been very successful in passing their class work, and have held regular meetings each week all over.

Miss Maude Gillis and Mrs. Harry Gillis, of Boston, Mass., motored to the Island recently and are spending a holiday with relatives and friends in Norboro.

Congratulations are heartily extended to Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Connolly, Centreville Beduque, on the arrival of a bouncing baby boy on July 11, 1932.

The many friends of Mrs. Joe Lewis, of Freetown, will be pleased to hear that she is recovering rapidly from her operation in the Prince County Hospital a few weeks ago. All hope to see her out and about soon again.

Very interesting news has been received by old friends in Freetown. Rev. J. A. and Mrs. Cairns, of Poplar Grove district, west of Mossburn, Sask., celebrated their golden wedding anniversary. To celebrate the happy event the residents of the neighboring communities tendered them a reception and banquet.

FINE FLAVOR makes Fine Foods

AFTER all, it's the taste that tells. No matter how fine the food you buy, proper preservation is necessary in order to retain all of its natural flavor. Only with adequate refrigeration can this be assured. When you have an electric refrigerator you can be assured of adequate refrigeration at all times. For it maintains a constant temperature always under fifty degrees.

Proper preparation is as necessary as proper preservation. Cooked in an air tight electric oven, foods retain their full flavor and natural juices... none can escape.
