Dear Sir:—I have been shifted to a few different places since I last wrote you. I am now at the C. C. A. C., Convelascent Hospital, better known as the Charlie Chaplin Army Corps, and it is surely a nice place and very ideal weather, a little white frost occasionally, otherwise not cold. I started in yesterday doing some physical training, the first work of any account in that line since I got hit, and am quite soft after being in the hospital so long but I will soon be sent back to France now to help the boys. I had a dull Xmas but of course, our wants are all supplied here. I managed however to draw a couple of £s, the first money I've handled for some time. Write soon again. Yours truly, Dan. —H.

Last but not least was a solo and chorus kept the home fires burning. Miss Beatrice Robertson, taking the solo part in a very creditable manner. Miss Winifred Bruce ably presided at the organ throughout the evening. The boys were then presented with a valuable wrist watch while Mr. Garfield Stewart read a very appropriate address testifying to the esteem in which they were held. The boys replied in a few well chosen words, they were served by the young ladies of that place and vicinity. After wishing the boys a speedy return and "Good Luck" etc. The National Anthem was sung and all returned to their respective homes feeling that they had done their little bit. All three are of Red Point.

MISS WINIFRED BRUCE of Red Point is keenly missed by her numerous friends while she is taking a commercial course in Charlottetown. Mr. Ralph Robertson, Red Point who has been teaching in Kingsboro School for the past six months has sent in his resignation and intends joining the other brave boys of the navy in Halifax, the first of February.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSONS

January 14, 1917. JOHN THE BAPTIST AND JESUS. (John 1:19, 13:24.)

Golden Text.—"Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world."—John 1:29.

The lesson gives two estimates by the rugged and spectacular character John the Baptist—one of himself and his place in the development of the Kingdom of God, and one of Jesus. Both are pregnant with deep meaning and practical bearings.

Verses 19:23.—The Baptist's estimate of himself was occasioned by the question which the deputation of priests and Levites from Jerusalem put to him: "Who art thou?" It is a symptom of the soundness of John mentally and morally that he did not volunteer to give an appreciation of his place and work, or to produce any credentials for his mission. The man who is conscious that he has a message to deliver to his fellow men is the last person to think of himself or to pride himself upon others or make claims in behalf of himself.

And the first thought suggested in the Baptist's mind by the inquiry addressed to him was that he was being mistaken for his Master. Without hesitation, and in the most emphatic and unambiguous terms he hesitated to correct the mistake. How many religious leaders in the history of the world have failed to react against the suggestion that they were greater than they know themselves to be.

Verses 24:25.—The deputation, however, was not satisfied with this disclaimer. If John was not the promised Messiah, they wished to know who he was. What was their motive in pressing the inquiry and on what authority did they do so? The answer to these questions is to be found in the fact that prophecy was to the Jews a peculiar national institution that must be carefully watched over and guarded. False prophets must not be allowed to mislead the people; neither must true prophets be discouraged or hindered in their work. The duty of deciding who were false prophets and who were true was assigned to the council of 70. It was and always has proven a fearful task to authenticate or discontinue the true and false in religion by external theory and the prerogatives which only tests. Neither can councils and courts decide questions of spiritual import. The utmost that may be done by enlightened leaders toward safeguarding the interests of the common people is to advise and instruct the people in the proper ways of cultivating their own conscience and power. If this was aimed at by the committee which waited on the Baptist no objection can be raised to their course.

To the question "Who then are thou?" John was now ready to give clear and positive answers. He was "the voice of One Crying in the Wilderness." The designation will be recalled as one used in Isaiah 40:3. In its original setting it refers to the ideal forerunner of the returning exiles who was to prepare the way for the Lord and announce their coming. John by approaching it to himself accurately described his role as the herald and servant of the Greater One that was to come. The man who has found in his own consciousness a correct valuation of his powers and personality relatively to Christ has, like John the Baptist, succeeded in putting himself into the most advantageous position for success in his task. He may find that task hard because of the opposition of men; like John he may incur the hatred and wrath of earthly rulers, but his heart will be at peace and full of courage and strength for whatever may come. Above all he will have the spiritual discernment. So far as this strange, but supreme satisfaction of seeing and confessing his own glory eclipsed by that of his master. For there is no greater joy than the joy of being able to say sincerely and from the heart: "He must increase, but I must decrease."

Verses 26:34.—Having given his estimate of himself, John next availed himself of the very first opportunity of giving his estimate of Jesus. In speaking of himself he was obliged to declare his entire subordination to his younger cousin and master. In speaking now of Jesus independently of any relations to himself he at once declares him to be the savior of the world from sin. The question how did John come to apprehend this greatest of all truths in human life and history must be answered referring to the prophetic character of John, unless indeed the words are not exactly reproduced by the evangelist, but are a paraphrase of an equivalent sentiment expressed by the Baptist in similar terms.

Whatever the source of John's insight into the true nature of Christ's work his testimony is characterized by two peculiarities that should exist in all valid testimony. The first of these is that it is drawn from personal experience. The Baptist spoke not of hearsay or tradition when he said, "This is He"; he uttered a conviction of which he could give a clear and consistent account. He had become certain because of signs at the scene of the baptism that Jesus was the Christ. He was ready to give the reasons of the faith that was in him. In all ages and under all conditions this sort of testimony has been the strongest and most fruitful of results. Whoever gives his estimate of Christ upon the ground of an experience at first hand is bound to lead men to Christ and thus furnish them with an opportunity to get an experience of their own.

The second feature of the Baptist's testimony is that it reaches the heart and mind of Christ's mission and work. Not only in the declaration that He was the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world, but also in calling Christ's work baptism "in the Spirit" John shows an infinitely higher conception of the Messiahship of Jesus than the men around him had. He alone can give an adequate estimate of Christ who apprehends in a measure the meaning of his person and work for the salvation of the world. To learn about the outward circumstances of his earthly life, to identify the places where he worked and the dates of the events concerning him, even to be able to repeat his words fully and exactly is not as yet to qualify one's self to witness to him. This kind of knowledge is good so far as it goes, but he who would prepare the way for Christ's coming to the lives of men today must be able to speak of his mission as savior from sin and a baptizer with the Holy Spirit.

The Crown of Womanhood

"Uncared for hair cannot be beautiful. There is no part of the human makeup so revolting as the hair. It cries out: Look at me, care for me, or I will disgrace you! Treat me with consideration and I will be a glory to you."

By devoting a few moments regularly to brushing and intelligent application of NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE, the hair may be made to yield wonderful returns in increased personal charm.

Dandruff is the direct cause of more hair trouble than anything else. The hair becomes thin, harsh, unloves and falls out in quantities. It looks dead and lifeless; there is no luster. The hair stops coming out, the itching ceases almost at once and withal there is a most gratifying sense of cleanliness.

To the woman who wishes to make the most of nature's gifts by having fluffy, beautiful hair, NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE is a toilet necessity. It is exquisitely perfumed and is a delightful hair dressing.
