—It is generally supposed that mail-carriers generally make good time but this proposition is evidently not cherished by a prominent customer house official of Summerside. Having occasion to remain in Bedque over night, and not wishing to be late for work the next morning, he did not feel inclined to wait for the only conveyance to Summerside that morning but started to walk home. This feat he claims to have accomplished in less than fifty minutes, beating, as he claims, the time of the mail carrier by some minutes. If his story be true, why not have him appointed carrier, as this official is supposed to make the best time possible, and providing this is so, he should be at once given the contract of carrying the mail between Bedque and Summerside.

WHITE HOUSE SECRETARY.

CHICAGO, Ill., Aug. 26—Advances tell that Miss Isabel Hagner, secretary to Mrs. Roosevelt, is remarkable for the beauty of the gowns that she wears at the White House social events, in which, in her capacity of first lieutenant to the President's wife, she often takes part. Her salary is $1400 a year, but she is so clever about designing her clothes that her appearance never suffers in comparison with that of the wealthiest of the visitors to the executive mansion. Miss Hagner's duties are manifold, and she is certainly a splendid example of the "all-round" American girl. She knows the ins and outs of Washington society thoroughly, and she has a complete knowledge of etiquette for every possible occasion. Until financial reverses caused retrenchment in her father's home, she was a belle in Washington, and counted among her friends almost all the notables of the city. This familiarity with society gives her a fine poise, now that she has practically all the management of the White House entertaining. She seems never at a loss even in the most trying circumstances, and Mrs. Roosevelt is said to reply on her ready wit to brush away any little awkwardness or small social jealousy that may cause in official circles. Her letters and notes are models of grace and tact.

All lists of guests come under the secretary's supervision, and she gives her personal attention to the decorating of the rooms and tables for the White House functions, and it has been jokingly predicted that if the President's chef should suddenly fall ill, this energetic and capable girl would find no trouble in taking his place in the kitchen, so versatile are her talents.
