OPENING QUOTATIONS ON AUSTRALIAN WOOL

Nothing can be a better illustration of the terrific drop in the price of staple commodities than the average quotations on wool at the first week's auctions held recently at Sydney, N. S. W. Mr. B. Millin, Commercial Agent in Sydney writes in the forthcoming issue of the Commercial Intelligence Journal, that the opening average this year was 6 1-2 pence per pound. This compares with last year's price of 8 shillings 6 pence per pound, that of the year before of 11 1/2 pence per pound, and the 17 shillings 2 pence price of the 1928-29 season. Buying for Japanese account is strong and of good volume. This is an interesting development, and might possibly suggest a broadening of this textile industry in Japan.

ENGINEER IS LIFE SAVER—Taken from the Boston Post—J. A. MacKay of Montpelier, a central Vermont railway engineer was commended by Manager Edmund Deschenes to duty in connection with bringing his train to an emergency stop and saving the life of a man who had chosen the railway tracks as a place to pass the night in peaceful slumber. When the matter of Engineer MacKay's prompt action in stopping the train after the beams of the powerful headlight had revealed the reclining form on the ground between the rails, was brought to Mr. Deschenes' attention, the manager praised the engineer's attention to duty and his promptness which resulted in the saving of a human life. The report of the affair, as submitted to Central Vermont headquarters, said, "On the night of August 22, 1931, Engineer MacKay sighted the prone form of a man between the rails as his train was nearing Montpelier Junction. The engineer made an emergency application of the brakes and stopped his train within a few feet of the man who was disputing the right of way. The sleeping man was awakened by the train crew and taken to Montpelier where he was turned over to the police. Upon questioning, the man said his name was Joseph Goodnature and admitted that good luck had been with him when Engineer MacKay's keen eyes spied him on the track.—(Engineer MacKay is a son of the late John MacKay of High Bank, Prince Edward Island). THE INEVITABLE The stream is calmest when it nears the tide, The flowers are sweetest at the eventide, The birds most musical at close of day, And souls divinest when they pass away.

The dawn is lovely, but a holier charm Enfold the evening's robe of balm, And weary men must ever love her best, For morning calls to toil, but night to rest.

All things are hushed before her as she throws O'er earth and sky her mantle of repose; There is a calm, a beauty and a power That morning knows not in the evening hour.

Oh when our sun is setting may we glide, Like summer evening toward the eventide, And leave behind us when we pass away A starry twilight round our sleeping clay.

WAR VERSE CANADA WINS CHALLENGE CUP

The following has been contributed in honour of our Comrades by Major D. A. MacDonald, of this City. Thirteen years ago Nov. 11, 1918, little was thought that when the last order was given "Cease Fire" that this civilized world would have drifted back to its selfish ways of living.

The principles of those years 1914-1918 seem to be stamped out and the sacrifice of willing hands and stout hearts have been a thing of the past. When one stops to think, it seems to some of us like yesterday, but no, it is years ago when men gathered so quickly. How willingly Mothers and Wives gave up their all for honour, for pride, for the Glory of God and the Great British Empire.

AFTERWARDS IN FLANDERS

Out of their mingled earth tall trees are sprouting Withered their laurels now, their names unguessed; Here, where they died to save us, nothing doubting, Sheltered from our forgetfulness they rest, Falls once again the twilight of November; These gave their lives when life was at the May, Have I the right to whisper, "I remember?" I was not with them when they marched away.

All that they never had was mine, full measure, Dying, they passed to me their heritage— Love, friendship, toil, achievement, learning, leisure

Voices of children, golden middle age, And with it all, the knowledge never sleeping. Though none reproached, that I was not as they, That life is won by losing, lost by keeping—

I was not with them when they marched away. Think of it. In four years this mighty Empire buried 1019882. Out of this there sleeps in France and Flanders 769000. In reverence to the Mothers of these, we quote the following poem.

The stream is calmest when it nears the tide, The flowers are sweetest at the eventide, The birds most musical at close of day, And souls divinest when they pass away.

The dawn is lovely, but a holier charm Enfold the evening's robe of balm, And weary men must ever love her best, For morning calls to toil, but night to rest.

All things are hushed before her as she throws O'er earth and sky her mantle of repose; There is a calm, a beauty and a power That morning knows not in the evening hour.

Oh when our sun is setting may we glide, Like summer evening toward the eventide, And leave behind us when we pass away A starry twilight round our sleeping clay.

BERMUDA MUST FORM HER OWN DEFENCE CORPS

HAMILTON, Bermuda, Nov. 9—Warning his hearers that the home government must inevitably withdraw imperial troops from the garrison here, Lieutenant-General Sir Thomas Astley Cubitt, K. C. B., C. M. G., D. S. O., governor and the commander in chief of Bermuda, urged the strengthening and support of the volunteer militia forces in a speech at a banquet given in the Bermuda volunteer rifle corps. "It may well be," his excellency declared, "that the time will come when the imperial government, overburdened by expenses at home and abroad, will say to you, 'Bermuda, defend yourself; carry on on your own.'"

General Cubitt made it plain that Bermuda, except Gibraltar and also Malta, was the only small colony in the British Empire which was garrisoned by British troops sent out from England, and these islands did not enjoy the military importance of the British strongholds in the Mediterranean. To guard definitely against domestic disorders and foreign aggression, no matter how remote the eventual might be, he declared that the colony must raise her military forces entirely from her own population, and anticipate little or no assistance from the imperial government.

British Art Arises From Foreign Sway

LONDON, Nov. 9.—"At last the Invasion of Britain by foreign artists seems to have received a decided check," says Gai St. Bernard art critic of The News-Chronicle. "They have held our stage for far too long. Who, though, shall blame them when they have been so ardently encouraged by our own patriots? "Our artists are themselves largely to blame for being without honor in their own country. Too many of them have wasted years in famous imitation of Continental art, in order to attract so-called collectors who leave them up a dis appointing alley, and turn to a new foreign 'fashion' every ten minutes. Thus, many British artists have lost the old type of patron without finding a new one. "And now, suddenly, we are entering upon a new British season, and Algernon Newton is showing his paintings of London's Regency houses at the Leicester Galleries. The still canal and Thames water, the sun's glow from behind the clouds, and the wealth of orderly details in a general broad scheme, give these pictures an almost eerie atmosphere. They are urbane rather than austere, with a ghost of a smile due to the gentle, light-reflecting colors. Many have also been compared with Canaletto's works, but there are no human figures painted with his crisp touches, nor, be it confessed, his frequent mechanical glitter. We can be proud of Mr. Newton.

"Let Us Have Peace"

Thirteen years ago peace came to a war-sick world. To Thousands, years since the coming of Prince of Peace with His message of love and brotherhood. Is it not time that war with all its horror and degradation should be cast aside forever and some of the teachings of the Great Master put into practise.

"Lord God of Love, let us have peace, From war's vain sacrifice give us release, Grant peace the victories was cannot know, God of the ages, Thy mercy show, "Hast thou not seen Thy fields and meadows green Red with the blood of men, where war hath been? Dost Thou not know war's fearful endless roll, The countless graves of those who paid the toll? Teach us to learn to build, O gentle Lord, Not to destroy; but bend each wielded sword Into a plowshare, Thy fields to increase, Lords of the lives to be, let us have peace!

Just how near or how far we are from realizing this prophesy, time will tell and history will record but to those of us who have seen the rise of the modern miracles of science and invention, nothing that man undertakes to overcome or accomplish, seems impossible. This has been demonstrated in many departments of human endeavour. But great changes in human thought do not come about in a sudden or spectacular manner, they are the outcome of a quiet and persistent growth. So the belief that war is an inevitable accompaniment of civilization is one which still persists even with all the horrors of the last war fresh in our memories. But as we begin to realize that war settles nothing but only adds to the sum of the misery which it creates, we also realize that peaceful arbitration is the only sane way in which to settle international difficulties.

If in this Twentieth Century, the prophesy of Victor Hugo is to be fulfilled and a new era of peace ushered in, this peace must first become a mental conception before it can become a reality. Thoughts of peace must replace thoughts of war. Someone has said, "Give me the money that has been spent in war and I will build a schoolhouse in every valley over the whole earth. I will crown every hillside with a place of worship consecrated to the gospel of peace."

And only as the ideal of World Peace is set up in the minds of individuals will it become universal. This is the principle that was laid down by the Great Master when he told the parables of the grain of mustard seed and the lump of leaven. So if individuals who believe in the ideal of peace, would condescend from all parts of the world, think peace, and act world, but the one that brought the peace what a tremendous change would soon come about in the whole attitude toward war. The British Empire crown his bout would soon come about in the whole attitude toward war. The British Empire crown his bout would soon come about in the whole attitude toward war.

British Empire crown his bout would soon come about in the whole attitude toward war. The British Empire crown his bout would soon come about in the whole attitude toward war. The British Empire crown his bout would soon come about in the whole attitude toward war.

British Empire crown his bout would soon come about in the whole attitude toward war. The British Empire crown his bout would soon come about in the whole attitude toward war. The British Empire crown his bout would soon come about in the whole attitude toward war.
