Address By Chief Justice At Rotary Club

The code governing the conduct of the English barrister is probably higher than that governing the conduct of any member of any profession anywhere else in the world, Chief Justice Thomas A. Campbell told the Charlottetown Rotarians at their weekly luncheon yesterday.

The English barrister may not use the word "barrister" on his letter head, the Chief Justice said, nor may he affix it to his name on the sign at the entrance of his office. He may not give an interview to the Press nor may he publish his photograph for publication upon his admittance to the Bar.

The conferring of a "King's Counsel" upon the barrister in England is always a recognition for outstanding merit, the Chief Justice said. Upon being awarded the honour, the barrister will not appear in a Superior Court except as a counsel in important cases and a junior counsel must appear with him.

The Chief Justice said that in England the duties of a solicitor and a barrister are not combined in one person. The solicitor interests himself mainly in the office work and does not appear in court. These conditions do not apply in Canada. His Lordship made no comment on the respective merits of the two systems beyond saying that the Canadian system was cheaper for those having business to do with the law.

The medical profession also had a strict code, the speaker said. There was the difference, however, that whereas an English or Canadian Court could not compel a lawyer to divulge communications made to him by his client, a medical practitioner, in certain cases, could be compelled by the Court to divulge the confidences entrusted to him by his patient.

The doctor also was compelled by the law to divulge to the authorities the names of certain diseases from which his clients might be suffering. A lawyer was expected to defend without hope of fee any case assigned him by the Court and should consider such an assignment an honour, Chief Justice Campbell said. Such assignments pertained, as a rule, to the defending of persons who were unable to pay for such services.

A lawyer was justified in defending any person no matter whether the person believed that person to be guilty. In the first place, the accused is considered innocent by the Court until proven guilty and, moreover, may be proven innocent by due process of law.

The Chief Justice summed up all the ethics of all recognized associations, whether law, medical, or labour in the words, "As you would that men should do unto you, do even so unto them."

A vote of thanks was tendered the speaker on motion of Rotarian R.H. Rogers.

The Holy Name Society of St. Dunstan's Basilica "went over the top" as far as first class entertainment is concerned, with their presentation "The Merry Minstrels" which was staged at the Holy Name Hall last evening.

The show, which started with a bang from the opening chorus on, kept the crowd, which literally packed the hall to the doors, in a continual uproar of mirth and merriment. Every member of the cast, from the large mixed chorus to the Intercolor and black-faced, End Men, went through their performance in a manner which made the show a success from start to finish, and the cast and their directors, Messrs. Frank O'Neill and Austin Connolly are to be commended for their part in putting on such a splendid evening's entertainment.

Fine Show Presented By Merry Minstrels

The German farmer is living in luxury while the rest of the Germans in the British, French, and American Zones are on practically a starvation diet, according to Miss Gerda Hansen who addressed the Gyro Club at The Charlottetown last night on present conditions in Germany.

Miss Hansen, a native of Denmark, and who has a brother, Mr. Paul Hansen, living in Charlottetown, served as a censor for the British and American Zones in Germany until recently. She was a spectator at the Nuremberg trials on two or three occasions but there did not happen to be anything exciting taking place in the courtroom while she was present.

Miss Hansen said she and the other members of the Gyro Club, who she described as the most intelligent of all the Nazis, Goering, Ribbentrop, and Dr. Schacht were also present. Hess, she said, was absent since her visits to the trials were made at the time Hess was feigning lunacy.

The German people, she said, were indoctrinated with the principles of Nazism. Their prejudice and war ideology has undergone few changes. Reluctantly some of them will admit under questioning, that Hitlerism was not a perfect political system but they continue to maintain that their economic condition would be much better if Hitler were alive. Miss Hansen said it was her belief that the American and Canadian people were becoming too soft-hearted in their attitude toward the German people. She had lived amongst them for three years and felt sorry for the children, but she could not entertain any friendly feelings for a nation which cringed in defeat but was so ruthless in victory.

Nazi Mentality

The only reaction the German adult had displayed, Miss Hansen said, during the showing in the American Zone of a film depicting the German slaughter of Jews, was that not enough Jews had been killed.

She had visited the death chambers, and other places of horror in the concentration camps and had seen the rooms where the sick victims had been placed like sacks of cordwood after their death.

Munich was a ruined city. She had seen people living in quarters which only had a roof and a floor and two walls instead of four. Heidelberg was a city which was overcrowded and in which every available shelter was being utilized.

It was her opinion that the Allies, especially the United States and Great Britain had made some serious errors in their respective zones by tolerating the employing of former Nazis in administrative positions. Very often she said, denazification trials only caught the small offender and allowed the bigger ones to circulate as freely as when they were serving Hitler.

She thought there was little hope for the German people. They appeared to be growing more hostile and many of them were waiting for the four big powers, United States, Russia, England, and France. They seemed to think, Miss Hansen said, that they should not be compelled to pay for the havoc they had caused in the other European countries. "They are a lost generation," she said, "and appear to refuse to admit that they, under Hitler, were responsible for all the misery thrust upon a peaceloving world."

Black Market

The black market had caused immense distress in Germany, Miss Hansen said. The urban dwellers had given all their furniture and whatever other valuables they had to the farmers in return for food to supplement the 1,550 calories of their daily ration. Many of the farmers' homes were adorned with Persian rugs, costly pianos, and other expensive articles given by urban dwellers in exchange for food. The city residents were now at the end of their resources for they had nothing further to give to

Wind Blows Ice To Sea

"Sunday's northerly gales sent miles of ice to the sea where it will quickly grind up," was the report received from Mr. Angus Brown, official ice observer for the Department of Transport, following his return from yesterday's aerial ice patrol.

He also reported that the steamer track entering Northumberland Strait by East Point and Strait of Canso was in very good shape at time of observation, and that Northumberland Strait itself was improving, and is navigable by day. Mr. Brown stated that the steamer track from Fame Point to Cape Ray, Newfoundland, might present some difficulty, as the Cape was only ten miles wide yesterday morning. Two large steamers passed over this track while they were carrying out observations, and a third steamer was seen entering Port Aux Basques, Newfoundland.

Concluding his report, Mr. Brown said that Louisbourg Harbor was open, but that the approaches to Sydney Harbor were closed at time of observation.

Canadian Ass'n Of Consumers Make Protest

Strong protest has been made by the Canadian Association of Consumers with regard to the confusion existing in some quarters concerning the Association and various so-called "housewives" groups. Any group of consumers, it is pointed out, which does not carry the qualification "Canadian" in its name, has no connection with the above named organization.

The Canadian Association of Consumers was established by more than fifty national women's organizations at Ottawa on Sept. 29-30, 1947. It was set up as a national, democratic, non-political organization, to be completely controlled by the women who are and who become members of it.

All the units of the organization are known as "branches" of the Canadian Association of Consumers, and the quality and standard of living in Canada, particularly for low, marginal and fixed income groups. Their programme is concerned with the high cost of living and the reasons for prices; improved standards of quality and informative labelling of food, clothing and household equipment; wise planning of family spending and saving; housing; problems of the home market; from producer to consumer, and foreign trade, especially as it affects jobs and standards of living in Canada.

The policy of the Canadian Association of Consumers is to do a thorough fact-finding job before making recommendations or offering solutions; to inquire into situations and their causes, assemble information and distribute it, ask for opinions and suggestions, and make recommendations in the light of careful study and considered judgement.

The Association's board of directors includes representatives from every Province in the Dominion, as well as representatives from each of fifteen national women's organizations.

The black market in return for food. The authorities had made some effort to check the black-market practices of the farmers but it was a difficult task, Miss Hansen said, for the German farmer was an adept at concealing his surplus products at the increasing coolness between Soviet Russia and the United States. The Russian guards, she said, were always suspicious and ever on the alert to prevent even the slightest violation of their frontiers. Whether or not there would be war soon, was a question which Miss Hansen said she did not feel competent to answer.

Mr. Frank Curtis presided at the meeting.

major speech at the annual dinner of the Association tomorrow, spoke only briefly in welcoming delegates.

He hoped that out of the program of action which would lead the Progressive Conservative Party to victory.

He was sure that if a Progressive Conservative government was elected Ontario and Quebec, the two Provinces which have remained outside a taxation agreement with the Federal Government, would sit down and discuss their problems with Mr. Bracken and his Cabinet.

Mr. Bell said he believed Quebec, New Brunswick, Saskatchewan and Alberta will follow Ontario's lead and call provincial elections this year. Then he added:

"It is my view that a Federal general election is likely in the autumn of this year - summoned shortly after the Liberal national convention. I do not think they will wish to risk another session in Parliament."

"Actually an election depends largely upon two factors - who is chosen as Liberal leader and the extent of Liberal defeats in Ontario, Quebec and Saskatchewan. If those defeats are really crushing then the new Liberal leader might decide to postpone the plunge to a more propitious time."

COMPLEXITIES (Continued from Page 1) ism will be reflected. Deputies are elected by proportional representation, which means the number of seats each party receives depends exactly upon the percentage of popular votes its candidates poll. If the Christian Democrats get more votes than the Popular Front they can get enough support from other anti-Communist parties to continue in control of the Government. The Communists would be out in the cold.

If the Communists get the "most votes" they are sure to demand that they form the government, even though they lack sufficient support from other parties to win a vote of confidence in the Chamber of Deputies.

In the 1946 elections for the Constituent Assembly, Communists and pro-Communist Socialists combined polled 39.7 per cent of the vote. The Christian Democrats won 35.2 per cent. Watch for the comparative results in this election. If the Popular Front gets more than the 39.7 per cent its elements had in 1946 it may fairly claim a victory. If it gets less, it will have suffered a setback.

Similarly, if Christian Democracy gets more than 35.2 per cent and especially if it gets more votes than the Popular Front it will be justified in claiming an anti-Communist victory and one for the Western way of life.

LEFTISTS (Continued from Page 1) probably will not be known before Thursday. The election was held Sunday and Monday.

Only a trickle of returns have been reported thus far from traditionally Conservative Southern Italy. That gave de Gasperi's party its biggest margin in the June, 1946, Constituent Assembly election, but there have been some reports that its landless peasants were heading the Communists' promise: "Vote for us and we'll give you the land."

Despite spotty weather, an estimated 90 per cent of Italy's 20,000,000 eligible voters cast ballots for the first parliament of the Italian republic. This may be a world record for a free election.

Voices Confidence Asked by the Ottawa correspondent of The Guardian if the Women's Conservative Association on P. E. I. felt discouraged over the results of last December's provincial election, Mrs. Sutherland instantly responded: "Indeed we are not. The strength and the spirit of our women's delegation here today reflects more clearly than anything I might say our confidence and our determination to keep our organization in top gear and work towards the goal of a Progressive Conservative Government here at Ottawa."

Mrs. Sutherland recalled that she was the only women's representative from Prince Edward Island at the annual meeting of the party last year and that it was most gratifying to see the way the women of the Province rallied to the party banner in 1948.

"We're all delighted with the spirit of this meeting," she added. "Instead of waiting until the afternoon to get down to business, committees were sitting about the conference tables discussing national affairs even when later delegates were just arriving at the registration desk."

"What has impressed me most this year is the increasing knowledge of political issues among women delegates from all parts of the Dominion. They have been following the advice of our national president, Mr. J. M. MacDonnell, and our national director, Mr. R. A. Bell to excellent advantage."

Although most of the Progressive Conservative members for the Maritimes dropped in at sessions of the party meeting, Mr. McLure was held at the Parliament buildings by the meeting of the committee on Government owned railways and shipping. "I tried to get the committee meeting adjourned," Mr. McLure said, "but Mr. R. C. Vaughan, president of the C.N.R. has come up here from Montreal and was all prepared to make his report. In view of the crisis over Maritime freight rates, I did not feel that I could be absent from this committee which met both this morning and afternoon."

At this morning's session, annual Progressive Conservative meeting, E. D. Fulton, president of the Young Progressive Conservative Association of Canada had high praise for the young P.C.'s of Charlottetown for their aid in electing Progressive Conservative candidates for Queen's in the Provincial election of December last. Work of the younger group is also making its effects felt in Nova Scotia, he added.

INCOME (Continued from Page 1) of the average for the non-Maritime Provinces, while New Brunswick's were 47 per cent and Nova Scotia's 62 per cent.

"Even allowing for lower costs owing to less urbanization, the substance nature of the economy, lower wages and salaries, etc., it is apparent that the expenditures on social services in relation to needs are much below earnings" the survey added.

BRITAIN NEEDS (Continued from Page 1) 1947 when 1,206,345 hundredweight were obtained in the United States, where dollar shortages have made purchases impossible.

Canada supplied 55,471,000 dozen shell eggs in 1947. This year Denmark plans to increase its shipments about 4,000,000 dozen to 35,500,000 dozen and Holland proposes an increase of about 7,000,000 dozen to 13,000,000 dozen. Polish shipments may reach 7,500,000 dozen.

Apart from these basic foods, European countries will sell Britain larger quantities of vegetables, fruit and other food items to give variety to the starchy diet. But Canada will remain the chief supplier of wheat and bacon and a leading contributor to cheese and egg requirements.
