Fox Field Days At Rollo Bay
The first Field Day of the Rollo Bay Fox Club was held at Fortune Bridge on October 20. This Club is one of the 17 recently organized by the Provincial Fieldman W. F. Burke, recently appointed by the Provincial Department of Agriculture, for the purpose of this Field Day and Live Fox Demonstration. The splendid ranch of Mr. Samuel R. Johnston was placed at the disposal of the Club members. This ranch situated on the bank of the Fortune River is one of the outstanding ranches of the province, and many complimentary remarks were heard, with reference to the splendid layout of the ranch and the high quality of the animals.
For the purpose of Demonstration the Club members were asked to bring live foxes from their own ranches. There was a splendid response to this request, and about 50 foxes were placed on the table under different classifications. As each class was brought up for comparison, Mr. Burke discussed the quality of each fox individually, pointing out in each, the strong or weak points, and selected the animal most desirable from a breeding standpoint; at the same time explaining clearly why others were undesirable. Club members were urged to ask as many questions as they wished, and full advantage was taken of this opportunity.
An item on the programme which proved especially interesting, was a Pelted Demonstration conducted by the head pelt of one of the Provincial Fox-Marketing organizations. This practical demonstration elicited many questions, and provided a lot of valuable information, which was especially valuable at this season. This was followed by a demonstration of such microscopic work as may easily and profitably be carried on by the rancher.
Then a demonstration and a very instructive talk was given by Mr. John Jack, of the Dominion Experimental Station at Summerside. The Field Day which was one of the first of its kind ever held in the province is the first of a series planned to extend until late in November, and to be conducted in various centres over the Island.
About 70 ranchers were in attendance and all were unanimous in voting the gathering to be an outstanding success. Notice of later Field Days will be given through the Press, and ranchers should take advantage of the opportunities presented to them by Demonstrations of this kind.

anese attack was rifleman W. McGowan of the Royal Ulster Rifles, native of Donegal, Ireland. He died soon after admission to a hospital.

Four times the airman swooped at groups of foreigners seeking recreation along the Keswick road, outside the International Settlement but inside the British lines. Many were on horseback, others walking.

The fifth time the airman plunged toward a British position. McGowan was hit; other British soldiers dived behind sandbags. Then, said a sentry, a British naval officer ordered them to reply with automatic rifles, which they did.

"We were under orders not to fire unless ordered by an officer or we would have fired sooner," the sentry explained. He said six horses were killed by the Japanese plane.

No foreigners except McGowan were hit but four Chinese nearby were reported killed and six wounded.

H. D. Rodger, prominent American lawyer, said the attack was "plain murder." He said more than 20 men and women riders, "dressed in all kinds of sports clothes in which it was impossible to mistake them for soldiers," were scattered along the roadway.

R. K. Smith, manager here for a United States insurance company, said it "was a miracle" none of the riders was killed.

Passchendaele Anniversary

in the summer and autumn of 1917.

They make bitter and humiliating reading, disclosing as they do that behind the sacrifice of nearly 250,000 British lives were never-ending intrigues, involving ambitious politicians and the "brass hats."

At home professional soldiers in high places, jealous of Sir Douglas Haig, wanted him ousted at any cost. Haig, honorable and sincere, had nevertheless failed to appreciate many of the new factors operating in modern war. A soldier of the old school, he did not welcome innovations and at that extent he made himself vulnerable to the attack of his enemies.

Haig knew what everyone who had ever soldiered in France knew—that the only place where the war would be won was the west front. There the enemy had its greatest concentration; there lay the greatest menace against Great Britain. But the politicians thought otherwise. They wanted to weaken the British forces in France, to dispatch them to far-away fields—Sialonika, Mesopotamia, Palestine, Siberia, East Africa—anywhere was good, so long as it was not across the English Channel.

And while at home the battle between "westerners" and "easterners" raged soldiers were moving forward a few yards today, a few more yards tomorrow. Their battlefield was Passchendaele—a grey, swampy plain encircled by low ridges, pitted with shellholes and smelling of dead things, discolored water. Pleasant meadows and cool, shady woods had in the past given a radiant beauty to this little bowl of land. Now only blackened tree stumps raised their bare and tortured limbs in mute protest against their desecration.

Everywhere lay the debris of war. Rotting segments of what had once been human beings protruded from the churned up earth. The hours of darkness brought nightmares of unseen death, long agonies of body and soul. Huddled in the mud and swamps of Passchendaele men chattered cheerless vigils. They were chilled and soaked. For them there was no release. Day and night the shells hurled ceaselessly into their midst, tearing men savagely apart.

gains in the Sablanigo sector, however, nearly all sections of the battle front were quiet.

The insurgent aviation command announced its warplanes had sunk three ships at Tarragona, Mediterranean port 50 miles southwest of Barcelona. Two Government planes were said to have been shot down when they attempted to drive off the raiders.

From Salamanca, capital of the insurgent regime, came reports 20,000 former Government militiamen on the northwestern Oriedo front already were enrolled in the insurgent army. Government resistance in the northwest collapsed last week after the fall of Gijon, a Bay of Biscay port.

Rain all along the Bay of Biscay coast slowed insurgent mopping up operations.

Foreign Minister Delbos was striving to keep in close accord with Great Britain and in sympathy with the United States, Chaunteaux said, while Defence Minister Daladier was keeping the army at a high pitch "to give peace the guarantees of force."

Fox Field Day Held At Alberton

The newly-organized fox clubs at Alberton and Miminica held a field day at Alberton on Friday in the Alberton exhibition building.

About 60 ranchers from the nearby district were present, with prominent foxmen from Summerside and other centres.

Mr. W. F. Burke, fox field man for the Provincial Department of Agriculture, presided and gave practical demonstration on fox breeding. About forty foxes were assembled and used for the demonstrations. Clusters represented dark adult males and females, and male and female pups.

Mr. Burke gave pointers on what to look for, in a fox from a standpoint of good breeding, size and color, taking several of the foxes present to illustrate his meaning. Comparisons were made in the different animals on the table for breeding purposes. Mr. Burke also gave a pelted demonstration.

Mr. G. Ennis Smith and Mr. C. J. Gunn gave talks on the various phases of fox raising.

Mr. Reagh Tinney of the Prince Edward Island Fur Pool and Mr. Fred Watton of the Canadian National Silver Fox Breeders Association were present. The field day was considered a great success.

Reveal How British Ruse Foiled Daring Wartime Venture

(C.P. By Guardian's Special Wire) LONDON, Oct. 23—Among 20 years after the event, the story of how a British ruse foiled a novel and daring attempt by Germany to send relief to her hard-pressed forces in East Africa during the Great War is told in the book, "Zeppelin," relating experiences of the late Captain Ernest A. Lehmann.

One of Germany's greatest zeppelin commanders, Capt. Lehmann, decided from the effects of injuries received when the airship Hindenburg crashed and burst into flames near Lakehurst, N. J., last spring.

Aware that their troops in German East Africa were in urgent need of food supplies and war materials, Admiralty officers entrusted Capt. Lehmann with a bold plan to relieve the situation. With utmost secrecy, he ordered construction of an airship, which was given the naval designation "L59." When it emerged from the factory, it looked just like any ordinary zeppelin, but a stranger craft never saw the light of day.

Unique Design

The "L59" had a cotton envelope, designed to be made into tents and portable uniforms when it arrived at its destination. Sleeping bags were to be cut from the gas-cell material and shirts from the linen partitions.

Girders and struts of the duralumin frame were to be converted into portable collapsible barracks and a wireless tower. The airship's motors were to serve as motor power for the dynamo. The catwalks were covered with sturdy leather, which was to be used to make shoes for the colonial troops.

Included in the cargo were 312 gas boxes of ammunition, 230 machine gun belts containing 15,500 cartridges, 30 machine guns, nine spare gun-barrels, medical supplies, sewing machines, bush knives, and food supplies.

Under Sealed Orders

In November, 1917, Lieut. Commander Ludwig Bockholt was placed in charge of the ship and under sealed orders was given instructions to take off from Staaken, with the first stop at Yambol, 900 miles away.

The secret was so well kept that the ship was fired upon by Turkish anti-aircraft guns. And the Turks were allied of Germany.

From Yambol the "L59" headed for Crete, crossed the Mediterranean and the Libyan desert. Meanwhile, news of the flight reached the British War Office. How the secret leaked out or the precise burden of the ruse may remain a War Office secret for all time. But the "L59" never reached her East African destination and this is the story members of the expedition told on their return:

"When we crossed the Nile at the second cataract it was already dark. We navigated by the stars and made a wide circle around Khartoum for we did not wish to be seen by the English."

Then, on a wave-length previously assigned to us by the German Station at Nauen, we received a terse message from the Admiralty: 'Abandon undertaking and return.' Top. Enemy has occupied great part of Makonde highland and is already at Kitagauri. Stop. Remainder of troops attacking Portuguese from the south."

Although everyone on board was against the return, demotion reactions carried no weight. Bockholt was too much of a soldier not to obey orders. Abandonment of the flight was a closed issue and would very well have remained so even if Bockholt had known that the semi-official English message from the Malta wireless station, which had inspired the order from the German Admiralty, had falsified and exaggerated the situation.

Evangelization Of Canadian Life Is Topic

a promise. In the face of the very across that this world of ours can show in the shape of sin, and uncleanness, and shame, and cruelty, and hatred, we can pray this prayer in the utmost faith and hope, "Thy Kingdom Come."

But how is this kingdom of love and joy and peace to come? How is it to be established? What is implied in this petition which is often on our lips, and always in our hearts, "Thy Kingdom Come?" It cannot come by force or compulsion. That has been tried again and again, but it has always failed. It could not do otherwise than fail, because that was never the way by which God's kingdom was to be established in the world. It cannot come by human laws, or by social pressure, or by humanitarian movements, or through philanthropic agencies, simply because these things do not go deep enough. They do not touch the spot. These things do affect the outward relations of mankind. But the root and basis of the kingdom of God lies more deeply seated than any of these. The kingdom of God, as Jesus has said, is within us, down in a region of our nature where mere force has no meaning, and where the free and absolute consent of the soul is the only thing that has any meaning. And what does that bring to us? It simply brings us to this: The kingdom of Heaven can only come by the willing surrender of each individual to its claims and demands. That may seem to us a slow and discouraging way for it to come, but it is the only way in which it can come. It is a spiritual kingdom; it can only be promoted by spiritual methods, and the spiritual results that are to be secured by it cover everything and leave out nothing in human conditions of life. To put the matter more simply still, if you and I are praying this prayer sincerely, and if we are backing up our prayer by our efforts, the first thing to see to is that you and I personally are giving ourselves up to its claims. When you and I pray this prayer, "Thy Kingdom Come," it means first and foremost our own personal self-surrender to God. Until we have taken that step, this prayer is but the cherishing of an empty dream. We must bring this prayer down from the clouds of a mere obstruction into the matter-of-fact life that we are living every day. And the way to do that is to settle our personal connection with the matter. It is a far easier matter for us to pray in a general way "Thy Kingdom Come," than to pray in a definitely personal way, "Lord, be Thou my King; let Thy will be done in my every thought, and word, and deed."

If the thing could be done by a vote, there is not one of us but would vote, and canvass for other votes, for God's kingdom to come; for all impurity and injustice, all sin and selfishness to be clean swept out of the world. But the first thing to see to, the thing to qualify us to vote like that, is to know that the government of God is a real thing in our own personal lives, in our tempers and our talk, and in our appetites, and our tastes, in our ambitions, in the conduct of our lives both privately and publicly. That is the surest step that anyone can take in order to promote the coming of the kingdom of God.

Some of us are, in one way and another, actively engaged in movements whose object is to ameliorate social conditions, and all of us are in hearty sympathy with every admirable effort that is made in that direction; but the first thing, and the most necessary thing of all is for each of us to bring our own personal life into conformity with God's will. If we have no time in our busy lives for anything else in the way of some such christian service, nevertheless if we are only doing our best by God's grace to try and live in a way consistent with His kingdom, even in that effort we are helping to bring His kingdom nearer.

One of the features of our age is the large number of cure-alls that are being proposed and advertised in newspapers and elsewhere for the present unsatisfactory condition of things in our world. The earnestness and sincerity of such writers is undoubtedly commendable. But most of them miss the mark completely. We are bound down by a divine law in this matter.

It is through changed individual lives and characters that God asserts He will change the world. The kingdom of God, which is the only solution of all our difficulties, is not going to be brought about by mass movements but by individual surrenders to God's will and way. Why that was the burden of our Lord's teaching about the way in which God's kingdom is to come—that and no other way. And if you think back to the life of Jesus, you will remember that that was the plan He followed in kindling the fire which was to sweep the world. He first of all communicated His own spirit to a man or woman, and then that man or woman, in turn, influenced by their lives and characters

Fire Destroys Church Property In Jamaica

KINGSTON, Jamaica, Oct. 24—(CP Cable)—Seven persons were injured, one seriously, and damage estimated at $350,000 caused when fire swept through a block in the heart of this West Indies City Saturday.

Bulk of the damage was suffered by Roman Catholic Church institutions. The convent and school of the Immaculate Conception, leading Roman Catholic educational institution on the Island and one of the first established here, were burned to the ground with loss estimated at $300,000.

Nuns, majority of whom are from the United States, worked feverishly to save whatever they could when it was realized the buildings were doomed.

None of the schools, drawn chiefly from Central and South America and Haiti, was in the building at the time.

The blaze broke out in a beauty parlor in mid-afternoon. Two hours later it had roared through half a dozen structures including the convent and school, and threatened the Jamaica parliament buildings. Records were removed from there as a precautionary measure.

Governor Sir Edward Denham directed the fight to save Government house. Soldiers reinforced police to keep order.

Firemen were handicapped by low water pressure and it was not until late Saturday night that the blaze was controlled. A heavy rain storm beat out the last flames in the smouldering debris.

The most seriously-injured man was a fireman who was trapped under a falling wall. The six others suffered cuts and burns but none was in a critical condition.
