A HUSBAND TO MARCIA

By CAROLYN BEECHER

Chapter VI.

That was a strenuous year for John Aldrich. Marcia had made many friends, principally through the bridge clubs she attended. She usually lost about as much as she made, so keeping herself in a state of nerves hard for mere man to understand. But these women must have found her society desirable, for they accepted all her invitations and returned her hospitality by inviting John and Marcia to affairs at their homes.

Marcia insisted upon giving a large dinner party. John, as usual, wounded her feelings, although he had no intention of doing so. In fact, he had determined that never should she cry again if he could avoid it.

"Wasn't it lovely! And wasn't my dinner nice?" she asked after the last guest had taken his departure and they stood amid the ruins of a social evening in a small apartment.

"Everything was lovely and the goose hung high every minute of the time," John Aldrich replied, looking with love-lit eyes at the picture Marcia made in her pretty dinner dress, with her flushed cheeks and the glow in her eyes. "And you made a charming hostess. The table looked splendid, and the dinner was fine. Della served very nicely. You are tired, I am afraid."

"Tired! Why, I could start in and do it right over again! What did you think of the dessert?"

"Great! I noticed they all licked their platters clean. But what was it?"

"Brandied peaches with some sort of dressing that Sherry keeps a secret."

"You mean you ordered the dessert from Sherry?"

"Yes, no one else can make it. I am so glad my party was a success." Marcia perched herself upon her husband's knee and ran her fingers through his hair. "I love to entertain. We will give a little series of dinners, say once every two or three weeks. It's a lot of fun besides wiping out all our social debts."

"But, Marcia, dinners are an expensive way of entertaining. Diners like the one we had to-night," John tried to be as tactful as possible. "A supper, rarebit party, things like that we might do as often as you like. But I am afraid we won't be able to afford more than one such dinner in a season. Not until your husband is more of a financial succes sthan he is now." John finished with a little apologetic laugh which died in his throat as he saw Marcia's face.

"Arent's you making quite a lot of money with all that extra work you told me about?"

"Yes," John replied to her question. "I am making quite a bit extra, but we have lived right up to every cent of it. Prices I realize are high and we are living more extravagantly than when we were first married—before you made so many friends."

"So you begrudge me even my friends." Marcia rose from his lap.

"Don't be unfair, dear. We go out more, entertain more, which all means more expense. We also have to dress more because of it."

Marcia began to cry, not loudly, but with short, racking sobs in her throat. John always felt like a brute when she cried. But often now that feeling was mingled with one of the resentment. He was not a selfish man, neither was he an inconsiderate husband. He hated to be staged as one.

"Please, dear—there is nothing to cry about," he said, attempting to take her hands.

"Isn't there? A lot you know about it! You have your business, your men friends. I have nothing. I could sit and twiddle my thumbs all day for all you'd care. Men are so selfish!" she wailed.

"That's a libel." John tried to take a light tone. "Selfish in what way?"

"Every way. I see almost nothing of you nowdays. You used to hurry home early and we would read or talk or take a nice long walk. Now you never get home until dinner is ready."

"But, dear, how can I do extra work and so earn more money for you to spend if I do not stay at the office? And another question, Marcia. What good would it do for me to come home early when at least three afternoons a week you are at some darned old bridge party and don't get home until the dinner is not only ready, but ready to throw away because it is cold?"

"That's right!" Call me a bad housekeeper. Every one else says I do wonderfully. But that is what I must expect, I suppose, from my own husband,' she stopped in a self-pitying voice.

"Oh, damn it, Marcia!" John exploded. He was not a profane man, but this determination to always put him in the wrong was almost more than he could bear.

"That's right, swear at me!" And crying wildly now Marcia sought the privacy of her own room. For the first time in their short married life John did not follow and beg her not to cry, promising that he would say no more, that she could have her way.

As a result they had their first serious quarrel.

THE MARKETS

MONTREAL August 24.— The condition of the market for eggs for all grades being firmly maintained under a good steady demand for supplies for home consumption and a fairly active trade was done. he receipts yesterday were 4,523 cases, as against 2,678 for the same day last week, and 2,445 for the corresponding day a year ago.

Wholesale jobbing prices were quoted as follows:

Selected stock	45c to 46c
No. 1 stock	40c
No. 2. stock	38c

There was no improvement in the demand for maple product, and the market was without any new feature to note, prices being steady with maple syrup in a wholesale jobbing way quoted at $1.45 to $1.50 per tin of one gallon and maple sugar at 15c per. lb. A recent sale of a round lot of sugar was made at 14c per lb.

An easier feeling prevails in the market for potatoes on account of the more liberal offerings, and on the city markets sales yesterday were made at $1.75 to $2 per bag of 80 lbs. There has been some arrivals of car lots of New Brunswick potatoes, of which the quality was poor, there being fully 20 per cent. of one car not fit for table use.

Ex-Governor Slays Bear With His Hands

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont., Aug. 26.— Former Governor Chase S. Osborne, of Michigan, engaged in a desperate battle in St. Mary's river yesterday with a black bear, which he finally stunned with a blow on the head, and then choked to death with his hands.

Osborne, who is 61 years old, and an old-time bear hunter, was out in the river in a small boat when the bear appeared swimming towards him. Watchers on shore saw the animal half capsize the craft with its paws, and all the while the ex-governor belabored it with a small axe.

Then as the bear hung on determined on its prey, Osborne's blows began to tell, and as its glazed the old hunter seized it by the throat and held it until the breath was choked out of the great hairy body.

How Empire Is To Be Run in Future

British Journal Lays Down Principles Which Must be Adhered to

LONDON, August 26.— The Spectator, declaring that the Imperial Conference has been a great success, lays downs the following principles:

1. The Dominions must not be bound by treaties to which they do not give their assent directly or indirectly.

2. The Dominion cannot be given individual rights of veto, i. e., the right to accept or refuse ratification of a treaty that might be injurious to the whole Empire, and might give dangerous opportunities to foreign powers when seeking diplomatic bargains.

3. Foregin negotiators should be in a position to know exactly where the final treaty power resides in the British Empire.

"It seems to us," says the Spectator, "that the proper way for observations is not to be found in the setting up of an Imperial Parliament or anything in the shape of an Imperial Federation. We are not ripe for developments of that kind and shall not be ripe for another fifty years. What are we ripe for, in our opinion, is a great council of the Empire or magnum concilium (don't let us use the un-English expression 'grand,' which after all, only means "great").

"The great council of the Empire should not be a body with permanent or regular sessions. It would be summoned only for the ratification or non-ratification of any proposed treaty. It must, of course, discuss with closed doors, but all its decisions must be made public.

"Such a course" says the Spectator, would not doubt be in the beginning of a federal system, and the right way of beginning it, but till it ripened the Imperial Conference would meet as now."

MY CREED

I would be true, for there are those that trust me;
I would be pure, for there are those who care;
I would be strong, for there is much to suffer.
I would be brave, for there is much to dare.
I would be friend of all—the foe, the friendless;
I would be giving, and forget the gift;
I would be humble, for I know my weakness;
I would look up—and laugh—and love and lift.
