Success In Youth

If a young person hopes to succeed he must be free from any handicap his eyes may be to him. He will advance faster—have more energy and enthusiasm—more zest for studies—closer application if he is not compelled to combat eye strain. Is it possible that such a condition MIGHT apply to you?

That Royle Girl

By Edwin Balmer

While he quizzes the girl a strong light was directed on the witness box to aid moving picture operators.

THEIR FIRST MEETING

Max Elmen recently had concentrated his several injunctions into one great commandment: "Make them like you every minute." What ever else she might do, this she must remember, and if she merely obeyed it she could not go far wrong. "You go upon the stand," explained Max, "to establish an alibi; the alibi is good only if they believe you; they will believe you if they like you. So that is all you have to do, but you must do it, make them like you every minute."

So when the glare blinded her, she knew she must not squint; for no one could like a girl with a squint. An effect on the lights was to shut off the glare. Max Elmen and his son Herman, of Ket and his mother and also of Assistant State's Attorney Calvin Clarke and that Mr. Ellison who sat beside him. It created the illusion of strangely removing her into a far recess of the court-room into which Max Elmen's voice penetrated, borne upon the glare.

"Tell us of your first meeting with the defendant," said the loud but distant words; and off by herself. Joan Daisy recollected how she had encountered Ket when she was twelve years old.

"I met Fred Kellar when I was twelve years old and when he was a bell-boy in a hotel here in Chicago. "Obviously at that time no one could say that your association," Mr. Elmen started a sequence of familiar words and, precisely as he had drilled with her, he corrected himself and asked—"was there any sentimental feeling whatever between you and the lad at that time?"

"Why no," replied Joan Daisy. "What, if anything, served especially to direct your attention to him?" asked Max.

"I met him on Wilson Avenue," continued Joan Daisy. "I had stopped before a show window, and he stopped and looked in beside me. I noticed him and he noticed me. "I've seen you somewhere before," he said to me, when he saw I was trying to place him.

"I've seen you," I said. "You were a little kid and they were—Joan Daisy almost repeated what Ket actually had said, which was, 'they were throwing you out of a hotel.'"

"What," he recalled, said a passage which she had rehearsed with Elmen and she substituted, "they were with you—the meant my father and mother—in a hotel where I was bell-boy."

"Your honor," Mr. Elmen was saying, "it is essential to the defense to go with considerable detail into the relations between this witness and the defendant; her attitude toward him at all times is of the most relevant and material, as will be shown."

The judge nodded, and Mr. Clarke could not prevent her telling how she felt about Ket.

"Did this of your conversation at the time?" Mr. Elmen asked, and Joan Daisy could discern that he was much pleased with her.

SYNOPSIS

Upon resumption of court Joan tells just what happened on the night of the murder but deviates from the truth and describes the man she saw with Adele Kellar. At length, after much strenuous argument from both sides, the trial is completed and goes into the hands of the jury.

A NOTE

Sharply, at a few minutes before ten, Calvin's phone rang and brought him Hemmings' voice: "This is the office. Can you come over right away?"

"What is it?" asked Calvin, "a verdict?"

"No sign; but can you come over quick?"

"Why?"

"Come on over."

Calvin started immediately, wondering at the peculiar garrulity of Hemmings when there was nothing to talk about and that enigmatical muteness when they had something to say.

BUILDERS
We shall build on!
We shall build on!
On through the cynic's scolding,
On through the coward's warning,
On through the cheat's suborning,
We shall build on!

Firm on the Rock of Ages,
City of saints and sages,
Laugh while the tempest rages,
We shall build on!

Christ, though my hands be bleeding,
Fierce though my flesh be pleading,
Still let me see These leading,
Let me build on!

Till through death's cruel dealing,
Brain wrecked and reason reeling,
I hear Love's trumpets pealing,

AN HOUR FOR DECISIVE ACTION

At a round-table conference of the directors of the Hotelkeepers' Association of Canada, meeting in September in Edmonton, Alberta, the President of this Association was given his job of furthering the interests of the liquor traffic by proposing a "uniform law in all provinces to permit the sale by glass of all kinds of beverages, including spirits and mixed drinks, in hotels and restaurants and steamships from coast to coast."

Every true Canadian patriot should be up in arms against this latest national move of the liquor-promoting combination, backed by a comprehensive international organization.

"LADIES IN THE BAR-ROOMS"

Everything was going to be "just love" when the American Republic got back its legal grip, but something always happens to spoil sensuous pleasure. This fact is illustrated by a reprint in the Chicago Tribune a paper exceedingly favorable to the repeal of the 18th Amendment of the American Constitution, which reads:

Some of the old-time bartenders, who survive, say they find it difficult to recruit themselves to the presence of ladies in front of their bars. Any bartender who has had the patience and endurance to survive and now be an old-fashioned bartender would naturally be a conservative citizen, attached to old-fashioned ideas of propriety and decorum. There were saloon tabs and one of them kept women out of the barroom, for the better of the men and still more for the better of the women.

Things will not have been changed for the better in fourteen years if the order is reversed and if the man of family is to call up Charles to recruit women to the cause and be told that she just left, euphemism meaning that she might leave in an hour or so. A change of modes permitting the feminine to go to the barroom picture will be sad.

Men seem to have lost their grip on the control of custom and habit. The sturdy strain of intolerance and prejudice which declared that some things were not to be done, is fading and being replaced by a more logical and consistent attitude.

Comparing their facial features, they do not resemble each other; but in figure they were alike. Kellar's hair was flaxen and Three-G. George's was black, flecked with white. If one thought of the two men as they were seen nearby, the difference in their complexions was not so marked; but seen from across a street and through a window and under an electric light, would not Kellar's hair gleam like flaxen gray?

"MORRO CASTLE" TRAGEDY

As we write, the investigation into the "Morro Castle" tragedy is in progress. What the probable answer is does not yet clearly appear. They may find it in the circumstances reported in the New York Post by Arthur Bagley, Jr., a seaman of the drunken men in the lounge that night for profit is treachery to the interest of human kind.

WHERE WERE YOU?

Dr. Stanley Hugh.
I believe that, one of these days, those of us who are now in the midst of life will stand before our Creator. That I think will be an embarrassing moment. A good many matters are likely to be introduced into the account. But I can imagine that by all odds the most embarrassing questions will proceed something like this:

"You lived in the world of 1934, didn't you? That world was in an awful way wasn't it? Selfishness was making a last-ditch fight to save itself; Mammon was rearing up its followers; prejudice was abounding; hate was widespread. You can recall all that?"

"All right, tell us where you were in 1934 and what you were trying to do about it? In a world filled with crucifixion causes, what risks did you run of a cross?"

That will be a hard question to answer.—Christian Herald.

traffic? In 1912 the Retail Liquor Dealers' Association met in Ohio. Here is an excerpt from one of the speeches:
"We must create the appetite for liquor in the growing boys. Men who drink . . . will die, and if there is no new appetite created, our creators will be empty as well as our coffers. The open field for the creation of appetite is among the boys. Nickels expended in treats to boys now will return in dollars to your tills after the appetite has been formed."

forward as proof the fact that numerous articles left by travellers on Canadian National trains last spring are now being called for at the lost and found department of the railway.
These articles include rubbers, overalls and various other wearing apparel which was worn when the weather was chilly during the earlier part of the year and are now being sought when the cold of winter is approaching. Mr. Lovy cites another incident of a man who boarded an excursion train last spring for New York City, leaving his woolen gloves behind, and yesterday morning, he turned up at Bonaventure Station to reclaim the gloves, which lucky enough, were not recovered by moths.

Committed To Trial On Third Count

(C. F. by Guardian's Special Wire) HOPWELL, CALKIN, E. B., Nov. 16—For the third time this week on a charge of uttering a forged document, Gordon Balsler, of Moncton, was committed for trial by Magistrate Horace S. Goddard this afternoon. The accused will either remain in jail or be released on bail until the next Supreme Court sitting in Albert County, unless he chooses to be tried under the Speedy Trials Act.

The final charge against Balsler was that he gave to Mrs. Rebecca Kenzie, informant in all three counts under which he stands committed for trial, a cheque for $800 bearing an alleged forgery of the signature of R. D. Milton, Moncton Police Magistrate. He had exchanged $1,000 for notes totalling $880 and signed with the name of R. D. Milton, and for another note of $120 signed by Balsler. In return she had received only seven dollars for interest.

Magistrate Milton testified that the only one of the documents in question he had signed was a promissory note for $180. While this note had not been redeemed, he said, he still intended to pay it. The witness denied signing the $800 cheque or either of the notes for $500 and $200 bearing his name. He added he had never given Balsler permission to use his name for these purposes. "It is not a fact," he replied when asked if he had received more than $500 of the $1,000 in question.
