The writer of the article desires us to say in regard to the pronunciation of the word Fodbla, occurring in one of the contributions to the Magazine section of today's issue, that the best authorities indicate the correct rendering by the letters f-o-d-b-l-a. It is a disyllable and the second carries with it something of the consonantal sound of y, as in the Spanish n in canon.

The illness from blood poisoning of the Hon. George Simpson, M. L. A. of Bay View, will be learned with regret by readers of The Guardian. It is feared that the poison has spread so far as to make it doubtful whether or not amputation of the arm can be avoided.
