TO THE POULTRYMAN:

A Weekly Letter Containing Practical Pointers in the Management and Care of Standard Bred Poultry, Taken From the Daily Log Book of Sunny Crest Poultry Farm, Bear River, P. E. I. by the Manager.

In the past three weeks we have had a great many calls for information in the handling of chicks from the time they are hatched until they are three weeks old such as brooding, feeding, and housing, and, while I have touched on this at different times in the past, I think it would be well to give a brief outline which the novice can follow from the start without having to suppliment the brief outline with ideas of his or her own which are very often formed without considering just how the things is going to work out to the end with the result that during the latter period of brooding one is liable to find that although their plans were alright for the handling of the little bunch while they were small and requiring very little besides heat and sleep, there were a thousand and one things necessary that they had not thought of that he chick requires when they begin to take an interest in larger things than the inside of a flannel lined box or a kerosene heated hover.

On the Plant here we handle all our chicks in units of five hundred and, while, as the manufacturer of the many brooders now on the market will always tell you in his advertising matter that the same methods can be supplied to a brood of fifteen as to that of one thousand, it is neither practical nor economical to apply them, the heat and apparatus required for the proper handling of five hundred chicks is surely going to be a pretty expensive method for the bringing on of from twenty-five to one hundred chicks which is the usual amount raised yearly by the farmer or the town lot poultryman.

Let us take the case of the one who purchases one hundred day old chicks which will make a good unit to work on and the methods described herin can be either enlarged or reduced to suit the individual needs of the one who wishes to either enlarge or reduce this number.

The coal burning colony hover is rather an expensive way of brooding small numbers although there is no denying that it will make a splendid job of it and for the fancier who does not mind the expense I would say to stick to it, simple directions are supplied with every machine which will make its operations very little trouble, but, do not confuse the coal burning hover with the kerosene lamp heated affair, we have experimented with practically every make of the latter and have yet to find the one that will do the work properly and give the desired results, new ones are forever coming out with new means of generating the oil to vapor with a view (I presume) to cutting down the fumes under the hover and to provide a warm area which at the same time will allow a constant current of pure warm air through the machine, up to the preset time I think this ideal lamp heated affair is still in the making and it would be well to leave it alone until you see some of the larger breeders adopting it, they have a better idea of values than you and if the thing is workable and economical they will very quickly take it up.

In shipping Day Old Chicks we are constantly asked the best method of caring for the little fellows when they are received by the purchaser, and in order to arrive at some plan which would necessitate the smallest possible outlay thus making it practical for anyone wishing to raise even a dozen chicks, and at the same time one that was simple enough for the veriest amateur to bring them through healthy and hardy, we went to work on as mail home constructed fireless brooder and when we thought we had the thing in workable shape we brought of a batch of one hundred chicks and dividing them into two flocks of fifty each we assigned them to two of the brooders which we had made off the plan.

From the very first the thing was a success and although we had to correct several minor details the general plan was good and embraced the very points we were after, namely; simplicity of operation and economy for its first cost is little or nothing and the cost of running it just whatever valuation you place on your time in the ordinary care of a clutch of hen hatched chicks, and I might add that the brooder is far less trouble and eliminates the danger of all lice, mites (with reasonable cleanliness) and loss by rats or cats. Up to the present time we have not lost a single chick other than the weaklings which we have killed off in culling and at the present time they are the healthiest, finest bunch of youngsters we have ever had on the place, but to get on with the handling of them from the beginning.

We tried in all our work to imagine just how the buyer of day olds would proceed with the work and with just what material would be available on most any farm and here is the outline that has given all desirable results.

Chicks were twelve hours hatched when taken from the incubator and put in the brooder at about six o'clock in the evening and we simply put a layer of clean, dry sand on the floor of the outer run and covered it with about two inches of chaff and after putting the chicks in, a cloth was thrown over the whole thing and they slept for the following twelve hours or until well after daylight the next morning. Plenty of small white grit was dropped over the floor during the day and the little fellows spent some of the time out picking it over and getting a certain amount of it and the rest of the time in the back or hoverpart, sleeping, this made an ideal start, for it must be remembered that they were still being nourished with nature's supply of food and the little bits of grit and sand they were picking was helping to properly digest it and at the same time put the organs in shape to receive food.

In the evening a small saucer of sour milk with a cup turned mouth down so as to prevent the chicks from soiling up, was placed in the run and it was very few minutes before most of them were sampling it, any that we noticed were backward about tasting it, we held and dipped their beaks into the milk until all were getting a certain amount, the lactic acid in the sour milk or butter milk which is just as good, is a splendid preventative against the many digestive disorders which are liable to appear in young chicks, it appears to build up a resistance against these troubles and at the same time the milk is a good starting food.

The following morning they were running around and showing signs of hunger and a small table spoonful of chick grains was scattered in the litter and they were soon busy picking it up with some of the wiser ones making good use of their feet in the search, this was repeated at ten, twelve, two, and five o'clock the first day and in addition to the grain the sour milk was kept before them at intervals and plenty of grit thrown in. Second day of feeding was an exact repetition of the first making sure that after the last feed for the day their little crops were filled and after the morning feed of the small grains on the third day we supplied them with a dry mash of ground grains and omitted the ten o'clock feed of scratch or small grains our feed programme then being scratch grains at seven, twelve, and six o'clock with the dry mash before them all the time also plenty of grit, water and sour milk as often as convenient to the feeders (it is not well to leave it in where they will kick the litter in to the dish or soil it with droppings).

On the fifth day the brooder was moved out on the ground and left there for the entire day which allowed the chicks to pick up a certain amount of green stuff but which must be supplemented with some provided in the form of sprouted oats or even a little ground raw turnip, and here let me add that it is necessary to get the chicks outside by the fifth day and supply them a certain amount of green food or you are going to find them droop and go back on you.

After the fifth day they spent all possible time outside with three feeds of grains and the mash at all times, plenty of clean water and grit, and at the same time of writing the chicks on which this rountine has been tried are about the finest and healthiest lot one could wish to see, there has been no coddling or coaxing, simply clean, sanitary surroundings and wholesome food and water and I think this is about as near a fool proof method of raising and as cheap and simple as it could possibly be made.

To any one who is intending raising chicks this season and who is afraid of the brooding problem or who does not feel like laying out a lot of money for expensive equipment, we will be only too glad if they will communicate with us and we will gladly give them the plan for constructing this brooder and also full directions in the handling of the chicks from day olds to maturity and also all receipts for the feeding of same and we will put it up so that any school child in P. E. I., can put it up and get just as good results as we receive with our large equipped and expensive brooding department.

You Have a Right to Expect More

You pay a good deal of attention to your choice of tires—perhaps because you see them all the time. Have you also determined which is the one best battery for your car?

Be critical of batteries, particularly of the Exide. You have a right to expect more than the ordinary lasting-power from an Exide Battery. It was the first starting and lighting battery for automobiles, and is today standard equipment on more new cars leaving the factory than any other battery.

The Exide is a powerful battery; it will not get out of order unless badly abused, and it will last a very long time. That is the kind of a battery you have a right to expect in the new car you choose and in the battery you buy to replace a fagged out battery. For the Exide is a true economy on account of its long life and freedom from repairs.

It is well worth your while to insist on an Exide. If you should have any trouble in getting one, write us or our nearest district distributor.
