ANAEMIC PEOPLE

NEED MORE IRON IN THE BLOOD

If you are anaemic, you need more iron in your blood, and the tell-tale symptoms are a pale face—colorless lips, aching finger nails, poor circulation, and short breath, and more serious diseases are easily contracted when in this condition.

Mr. W. H. Hodges, of Kansas City, Mo., says:—"I suffered from the effects of bad blood, was run-down, dizzy, had headaches and did not feel like working. I had tried Beef Iron and Wine without any help. After taking Vinol four days I noticed an improvement and its continued use built up my blood and my bad feelings disappeared like magic. The bad effects of poor, devalitized blood cannot be overestimated, and it is the peptonate of iron and the true cod liver extracts contained in Vinol, together with beef peptonate, that enriches the blood, improves the circulation and in this natural manner builds up health and strength. Try it on our guarantee. E. A. Foster, Druggist, Charlottetown, P. E. I."

NEVER AGAIN TRUST GERMANS

France Has Learned Her Lesson In This War

HONEYCOMBED WITH SPIES

Moved to Bitter Anger by Revelation of Perfidy of Germans Who Had Lived There as Spies—Their Preparations

Four years ago Leon Daudet, editor of L'Action Francaise, began to publish a series of articles of designed to warn his countrymen of the German spies in their midst. The most significant of them were reprinted in a volume entitled "L'Evant Guerre," in which the editor gave exact information concerning various buildings and industries in France that probably would be turned to use by the Germans should they invade the country. Now M. Daudet has published another book "Hors du Joug Allemand," in which he lists the prophesies which have been verified. Whether one should be more amazed at the sagacity of Daudet in 1911 or the folly of the French people who paid no attention whatever to the warnings is hard to say. Yet even now the French have not grasped the whole significance of the German policy of infiltration. They are learning every day further details of the vast conspiracy directed against them from Berlin, and further year after year for a generation.

Never Trust a German

It is said that the French people have been moved to more bitter anger by the revelations of the perfidy of the Germans who lived among them for years than at the wanton destruction of French monuments in the course of the war. The French are naturally open-hearted and unsuspecting. They know, of course that some sort of spy system is necessary for the success of a military campaign. They have their own very efficient military spies in the sense that Germany has. When they learned that the good natured German doctor and the genial German landlord who had become naturalized Frenchmen years ago, and as such had been taken to the heart of the French communities where they lived, it was as though the foundation of their very existence had given way. If they could not trust these Germans what Germans could they trust now in the future? The answer is supplied by Pierre Baudin, ex-Minister of Public Works: "Our recent experiences obliges us to regard every German inhabiting our territory as a spy."

Infested with Spies

Many of the nominally French business concerns mentioned by Daudet in 1911 have turned out to be essentially German, and have been sequestered. The German officer Lieut. von Oppel, who on entering Lille three years ago last September first wanted to strangle and then shoot the prefect of the Department du Nord, was recognized as formerly a high official in a lamp concern situated in the immediate vicinity of a French arsenal. When the iron mines of Dilelette near Cherbourg were seized by the French it was discovered that part of them had been flooded by the German owners.

This district was infested with Germans, who had bought up as much property as was for sale, and evidence is accumulating that it was not mineral wealth that they were seeking, but a military base by the French. In the vaders. The most advanced of the German cavalry patrols on the road to Paris were caught within a mile and a half of a chemical and pharmaceutical works at a vital point of mobilization. Germans had bought the surrounding territory, and had vainly tried to obtain the right to connect the works to the main railroad by a spur.

Preparing for Invasion

They were unable to obtain this concession, however, which might have had serious consequences to the French, for an examination of their factory showed concrete foundations, where guns could have been placed to dominate the railroad and communications between a score of towns. Lacking the spur, however, the Germans could not secretly mount their guns. The two German officers who jointly administered the affairs of Turcoing were formerly prominent woolen merchants in the city. They failed in business some ten years ago, but were set upon their feet by the manufacturers of Roubaix and Turcoing. When the German invaders entered Vitry-le-Francois their commander at once asked where Falks were. He was told that they had been arrested by the French and were then in a concentration camp. Only fear of what might happen to the Falks prominent German merchants and spies of the city, deterred him from a policy of reprisals upon the French citizens in his power.

All Ready for Invaders

The mushroom caves in the vicinity of Soissons, in which the Kaiser's soldiers established themselves solidly in their retreat from the Marne, were found to have been abundantly supplied with munitions and supplies prepared for trench warfare months before. At St. Mihiel the Germans found cement platforms built for their huge guns. They had been ready in factories owned by Germans who had lived for years in France. The same thing happened near Rheims, where the invaders found everything waiting for them, such as shelters, cement terraces and quarry galleries stocked with ammunition. Had it not been for the great German defeat at the Marne, which caused all their plans to miscarry, there is little doubt that thousands of other supposed French subjects of German birth would have been found to have prepared the way for the German invasion. Enough has been discovered in the past twelve months, however, to make it certain that not within the lifetime of this generation or the next will Frenchmen trust a German or receive him as a citizen.

USING COLD CREAM

A cold cream that suits one skin to perfection will cause another misery. The individual woman must settle the thing herself, and if after trying several creams she finds nothing that agrees with her complexion it is pretty safe to assume that she has not yet found the light unguent or is using them all wrongly.

No species of unguent must be put upon the face until the skin has been cleansed of oil and softened by the warm bath. In the daytime the face can be cleansed occasionally with the cream, but it is better to get used to it only at night, where the face skin is concerned there is such a thing as using too much grease. In the application of all unguents massage is half the battle, so the trick many women have of dabbing on a blot of cream and smearing it lightly over the face is all wrong. The lubricant must be worked down into the pores for the velvety softness desired to come, and after they have absorbed all that they will the remaining oiliness must be removed with a soft cloth. If this superfluous quantity of cream is left on the skin it only does harm. The pores get so used to the drenching that they won't act without it, and all that lies on top only hardens or gets rank under atmospheric changes. Many species of pimples may be attributed to an over-use of cream.

The manipulation must be done in a way to hinder or correct the lines that come in the course of time. The beauty people use the three fingers of each hand, and with a firm yet gentle touch rub outward, in a rotary manner, over a place as big as a silver half dollar. Bit by bit all the face is gone over in this way, and the patient can easily tell when the important cheek muscles have been touched by seeing the skin pull tight about the mouth, thus effacing the drooping lines at the side of the nose. The muscles that run from the corners of the mouth over the cheekbones are massaged with a clawing movement, which must be light and quick, but not pinching. This fills out hollow cheeks and banishes the lines of worry about the mouth and nose. Hollow temples should be clawed up in the same light, brisk way and afterward treated to the rotary movements.

The woman who has to be her own masseuse should operate carefully or she may do more harm than good. If she works before a mirror in a good light she will have a better chance of correcting errors. Remember, the object of the massage is to stimulate circulation and to restore tired and sagging muscles, which must not be dragged away or rubbed harshly. The cold cream also restores oil to the skin and keeps it elastic.

AS UNDERSTOOD.

(From the Philadelphia Times.)
"Madam, you are a little run down. You need frequent baths and plenty of fresh air, and I advise you to dress in the coolest, most comfortable clothes; nothing stiff or formal."
When the lady got home this is how she rendered to her husband the advice given to her by the doctor.
"He says I must go to the seashore, do plenty of motoring, and get some new summer gowns."
