SINKING FUND LATEST ALIBI FOR DEFICIT

Mr. Saville Takes Complacent View of Failure to Implement Balanced Budget Pledge.

Following Premier Campbell in the Budget debate in the Provincial Legislature was Mr. George E. Saville, M.P. King, who resumed the floor on Friday evening, March 31.

Mr. Saville said it was true that he had always stressed the necessity for a balanced budget, and he had done so particularly during the last election campaign. But he preferred to see $219,900 placed in the sinking fund with a $60,000 deficit, than to see a surplus on ordinary account, and nothing placed in the sinking fund. Although a deficit of $78,000 was estimated for this year, it was also estimated that about $225,000 would be placed in the sinking fund.

"I did not promise paved roads in the last election," Mr. Saville said. "I was not thinking of them at all. That was a new matter. People are asking for them and I don't think any intelligent people would expect the Government to build paved roads and pay for them out of ordinary revenue."

As to public welfare expenditures he had nothing to say. It was very hard to refuse applications of this kind. He wished the people who asked for such expenditures would show the Government how the money could be raised.

Falconwood Hospital was costing a great deal of money. "But," added Mr. Saville, "those people have to be looked after. There is none of us can tell but that we might have to go there ourselves."

More attention, he thought, should be paid to Falconwood farm. Some steps might be taken to use the farm in connection with the teaching of agriculture in Prince of Wales College. "I don't think the farm should be done away with, because if the Government did that and bought the stuff even at wholesale prices, it would cost so much that they would be compelled to get another farm," he said.

Hospital Grants

He commended the intention of the Government to increase the grants to the hospitals. One reason why there were so many patients in the hospitals was the scarcity of doctors in many country places. People should realize, however, that treatment there is more costly than treatment at home.

He had written a great many letters to try to secure old age pensions, Mr. Saville said, and it always gave him pleasure to do so. These pensions only amount to a comparatively small sum. He would much prefer to see an odd person getting a pension who did not deserve it, than to see any old people in need of one. The same, he said, applied to unemployment relief.

He knew from personal knowledge that the chairman of the Fishermen's Loan Board had tried to administer the distribution of fisherman's relief so that no one would get it who was not entitled to it. It was true that "a lot of those people might have done better last year," but the fact remained that they were in need of relief. He himself had never recommended fisherman's relief except in necessary cases.

With regard to school books, he believed it was the duty of the state to see that every child secured at least a primary education. It would not cost a great deal to provide books to enable them to get that much. It might be a hard scheme to administer, but just today he had a letter from a man asking him to continue to stress this point, because there were a great many children whose parents were not in a position to supply them with books.

Mr. Saville commended the adult education and library movements. The public libraries were being patronized to a large extent, and there was no doubt but that they were doing splendid work. He congratulated the Premier on the speech he had made with regard to prohibition enforcement. He could not help but wonder if those people who were criticizing the Premier were not doing so to effect some political advantage.

Too Many Officials

In the agricultural department a large amount of money seemed to be paid out in officials' salaries, Mr. Saville said. "It seems to me that there are a great many officials in connection with that department. They may be necessary, but at any rate it leaves the Minister with a very small amount of money to use for other purposes."

Mr. Saville commended the fine display of vegetables and cattle at the Georgetown exhibition last fall. If the prizes offered at the county exhibitions could be raised a little higher, it would encourage the people to breed a better quality of livestock. He hoped to see the time when these grants would be doubled.

School fairs had not done just what the people who promoted them expected them to do, he said. But as local fairs they were filling a useful purpose, and were not costing a great deal. In his own district, Mr. Saville believed that the position of the farmers today is 100 per cent better. He could remember the first time lambs went to $2 each. Now farmers get as high as $18 for them, and they say there is no money in raising sheep. He could recall when his grandmother used to trade a dozen eggs for a pound of sugar. You couldn't get enough money for eggs to "buy a postage stamp" in those early days. In contrast with those conditions he cited current prices for cheese, poultry, and live-stock. He knew a great many farmers who are making money today. They are following mixed farming. If potatoes are a good price they sell their potatoes, and if not they feed them. Others, on the other hand, are easily discouraged and shift from one thing to another. They are "in-and-outers" and will never make good at farming or anything else.

Mr. Saville believed that some men he had in mind are putting away more money now than they ever did in their lives. Those men don't worry very much whether there are paved roads or not. They don't go to Charlottetown very often; they attend to their farms; they get their pleasure out of work; they believe in the dignity of labour and they are content.

The trouble with the younger generation, he said, is that they want to start where their fathers left off after long years of toil and self-sacrifice.

The only promise he had made in the last election, Mr. Saville continued, was that he would not urge increased ordinary expenditure but would do everything he could reasonably do to get his constituents a proper proportion of the expenditure. He had tried to act impartially in the matter of relief work, and especially to help war veterans regardless of politics. Conservatives got their share but he did not see why he should "love his enemies" at the expense of his political friends.

Whether in the next election he was crowned with "the laurel of victory or the cypress of defeat," he was sure that he would be able to say he had done his best.

Mr. Douglas MacKinnon, Fourth Queen's, moved the adjournment of the debate.

Predicts Greater Tourist Traffic For Island Province

Mr. Justice Arsenault, Chairman of the Prince Edward Island Travel Bureau, has received the following letter from the Executive Secretary of the Canadian National Parks Association:

March 31, 1939.
Mr. Justice A. E. Arsenault,
Charlottetown,
Prince Edward Island.

Dear Judge Arsenault—
Your report on the most satisfactory increase in tourist traffic in your Island must be most gratifying to you. You will probably remember correspondence carried on with this Association some years ago advocating a national park on your Island. You now have that national park and, owing to the unusually mild temperature of the water, you are likely to have an annually increasing number, not of tourists simply visiting the Island to say they have been there, but of summer holiday visitors remaining to enjoy the outdoor recreation available in your national park for weeks at a time.

The year before last I had the privilege of a one hundred mile canoe trip in the Prince Albert National Park in Northern Saskatchewan. This park was advocated for a long time by our Association before the authorities would risk the establishment of a national park outside mountainous areas. They timidly dedicated about four hundred square miles but very soon afterwards increased this area to over eighteen hundred and this Prince Albert National Park leads all others in the entire system in the average length of stay of its guests. Entire families have annually for a number of years spent practically their whole summer school holidays in this delightful area.

I feel sure that your province will have a similar experience in connection with your park because your authorities will carefully guard its reputation and not allow the visitor to be exploited, a policy which was rapidly wrecking the popularity of our first national park at Banff where the concessionaires were endeavouring to make from the tourists in the short tourist season of not more than three months enough not only to keep them in idleness the rest of the year but to spend expensive holidays themselves in California and elsewhere.

Again congratulating you upon the success of your province in attracting the tourists, I remain,
Yours faithfully,
(Sgd) W. J. S. Walker
Executive Secretary.

The Canadian National Parks Association is composed of leading men and women of Canada, its chief aims being:
To develop public appreciation of the beauty and economic value of our Canadian natural scenery.
To dedicate permanently as national parks the best examples of this Canadian scenery for the benefit and enjoyment of succeeding generations.
To emphasize the value of modern arterial highways in developing lucrative tourist business and mitigating Provincial isolation through the camaraderie of the national park guests.

To encourage the conservation of natural resources, especially the conservation, through the use of our national park playgrounds, of the national efficiency of our people upon whose health, physique and intelligence depends the progress or deterioration of our nation.
To establish modern forestry with its many tributary benefits.

FASHIONABLE NAMES SHOULD BE AVOIDED, ESPECIALLY FOR GIRLS

When you're choosing a name for baby, there are several points you should consider.
For instance, will the Christian name you fancy sound well when repeated in conjunction with the surname? If the latter has only one syllable, a Christian name in several syllables should be chosen.

Thus, if your baby's surname is Smith you should avoid plain John or Sue, and instead pick upon a longer name such as Christopher or Prunella.

Do not choose a name ending with the same consonant that begins the surname. A small point, perhaps, but one which might make a great deal of difference in a child's life. For one thing, it is difficult to say Albert Temple or James Stubbs over the telephone.

"Fashionable" names should be avoided at all costs, especially for girls. All over the world there are thousands of little Shirleys, whose ages will always be indelibly stamped on them.

Exotic or facetious names should be particularly avoided. Probably the organist who rejoices in the name of C. Sharpe Minor has found it an advantage. Perhaps the ice-man Fred Ice likes his name too, but on the whole it's a pity babies can't be consulted before we stamp them with the names which they will have to put up with all their lives.

Nature and wisdom always say the same.—Juvenal.

He who has imagination without learning has wings but no feet.—Joubert.
