MURRAY HARBOR

Sir:—A visitor to Murray Harbor would suppose the place was named after some early residents of that name, but that is not so. The name is of French origin, I have been told by one of the natives. The name comes from Morue, the French word for codfish. Could a name be more appropriate? No doubt, cod were so plentiful in early days that they came close to the shore and perhaps could be taken in the river. Even yet it is a great fishing place. How convenient? A man can keep his boat at his farm, motor out to sea and return with his catch to his home. Fishing and fox-ranching, seem to work well together, the foxy odor being dissipated by the sea breezes, while the smell of fish is very agreeable to Reynard.

Perhaps the largest ranch is that of the Murray Harbor Silver Fox Co. Mr. Simon Jordan, is caretaker. Mr. Jordan is the pioneer foxman of King's County. When quite young he had trapped foxes in captivity. Mr. John Stewart has a nice ranch of his own. The original owners of this ranch found they could make more money in other ways, so they sold out to John—for a song. But no one envies John his good luck. The Jordan's came originally from England. They settled at first, near Charlottetown but finally removed to Murray Harbor. Mr. Richard Jordan is approaching ninety years but he is able to go about. His sight and hearing are unimpaired, a blessing so often denied to the aged. The people of Murray Harbor are second to none in sociability and hospitality, and whether of Scotch descent or not, have a sense of humor and enjoy a good story or joke. Some years ago, while visiting at the home of Mr. Richard Murley, an incident happened that I will not forget. Being a musical family, there was some singing. Before leaving the writer was courteously asked to sing. Anticipating a little fun, I did my best to sing the "Hundred Pipers." Mr. Murley sat quietly in a corner, apparently enjoying the humor, if not the music. When I came to that part of the song relating how the hundred pipers swam the river, and blew a blast, which was too much for the English and they took to that, "stop! stop!" That's enough of that." "There goes those bragging Scotch again." Run away? No, they wouldn't run from a thousand pipers.

I said that perhaps the Scotch did blow a little, but they had a good deal to blow about. "Well," says he, "I will allow that a Scotchman is as smart as any one else, but not one bit smarter." The Englishman's dis-counting of the merits of the Scotch was, in this case, at least, more feigned than real. When I reminded him that his amiable partner was a daughter of the brave sons of the moor and heather, he supposed "it was the mistake of his life" (?)

I am Sir, etc.

A VISITOR.

GOVERNMENTS

each of our governments will direct its thoughts and influence towards securing and maintaining the peace of the world. Our conversations have been largely confined to the mutual relations of the two countries in the signing of the peace pact. Therefore in a new and reinforced sense, our two governments not only declare that war between them is unthinkable but that distrust and suspicion, arising from doubts and fears which may have been justified before the Peace Pact, must now cease to influence national policy.

On the assumption that war between us is banished and that conflicts between our military or naval forces cannot take place, these problems have changed their meaning and character and their solution in ways sufficient to both countries, has become impossible. We have agreed that these questions should become the subject of active consideration between us. They involve important technical matters requiring detailed study.

"One of the hopeful results of the visit which is now terminating officially, has been that our two governments will begin conversations upon them, following the same method as that which has been pursued during the summer in London. The exchange of views on naval reduction has brought the two nations so close to agreement, that the obstacles in previous conferences, arising out of Anglo-American disagreements, now seem substantially removed. We have kept the nations which took part in Washington naval conference of 1922 informed of the progress of our conversations and we have now proposed to them that we should all meet together and try to come to a common agreement, which would justify each in making substantial naval reductions. An agreement on naval armaments cannot be completed without the cooperation of other national powers, and both of us feel sure that by the same free and candid discussion of needs which has characterized our conversations, such mutual understandings will be reached, as will make naval agreements next January possible and thus remove this serious obstacle to the progress of world disarmament. Between now and the meeting of the proposed conference in January, our governments will continue conversations with the other powers concerned in order to remove as many difficulties as possible."

PRIME MINISTER SURPRISED

NEW YORK, N. Y., Oct. 10.—President Hoover in his conversations with Rt. Hon. Ramsay MacDonald of Great Britain, raised the question of the freedom of the seas and British naval stations in western Atlantic waters, according to a special Washington despatch in the New York World. The World story says: "From unimpeachable sources the World learns that during the Rapidan conversations after the tonnage question had been discussed, President Hoover to Prime Minister MacDonald's surprise, raised the question of freedom of the sea." President Hoover explained his fears of adverse Senate action on the naval treaty and the necessity of dealing with problems of sea law, and suggested invocation of the world court. Mr. MacDonald explained the reason why this was difficult for Great Britain, but promised immediately on his return to London to open negotiations on this whole question in all its aspects. Hoover, according to the World's authorities, discussed British naval bases in the Caribbean and at Halifax before his official visit closed. Mr. MacDonald was able to secure a statement from United States naval sources that these bases are not regarded by our Admirals as a menace to the U. S., but he promising to discuss this subject at Ottawa next week and raise it at once on his return to London.

sible before the official and formal negotiations open. In view of security afforded by the peace pact we have been able to find, we trust forever, competitive building between ourselves with the risk of war and the waste of public money involved by agreement to a parity of fleets category by category. Success at the coming conference will result in a large decrease in the naval equipment of the world and what is equally important, the reduction of prospective programs of construction, which would otherwise produce competitive building to an indefinite amount. We hope and believe that the steps we have taken will be warmly welcomed by the people whom we represent as a substantial contribution to the efforts universally made by all nations to gain security for peace—not by military organization, but by peaceful means, rooted in public opinion and enforced by a sense of justice in the civilized world."

halls, pool-rooms, movie palaces and various places of entertainment. The reason for such a condition lies in the fact that people forget that while they spend two dollars in amusement they place only a nickel on the collection plate. Some people have the vision of how to remedy defects but very few are willing to take action in the matter. David killed Goliath because nobody else would attempt it, a self-appointed committee of one. This is the spirit that the church needs in its young people at the present time. David's greatest test was not in facing Goliath, but in facing the sneers of his friends. This is the highest type of courage. The great well-spring of faith in God is the source of all courage. "Right is Might." God had delivered Daniel from the lion and from the bear and David knew that his Maker would support him in facing Goliath. Faith will be the source of the courage which will eventually conquer all evils, social, commercial and political and international.

In the course of a very interesting address on "A Great Canadian Experiment," Mr. D. R. Poole, second speaker of the evening, reviewed the boy's work of Canada from its beginning to its present successful stage. A great movement in boy life in Canada began in 1907. The first co-operative society began in 1914, based on the four-fold development of young life. Shortly boys' camps, boys' conferences and boys' parliaments developed from this organization. It soon became apparent that there was a lack of leadership in the work, and the men at the head of the organization promptly set to work to remedy the defect. There are 30,000 boys in Canada at the present time in organized Sunday School classes. These classes are taught by young men trained within the organization. The Tuxis movement has always tended to produce teachers and is doing so yet. Large numbers of recruits in the Christian ministry are products of the Tuxis movement. The objective held up at the Jasper Park parliament this summer was "Complete Christian living among boys." The seed has been sown. Many of the Tuxis-trained boys are in the universities, all with splendid ambitions.

The spirit of worship seems to be lacking in many churches today. There is evidence that the young people who are now in training will bring greater emphasis to bear on worship. Young men will enter political life and install Christian principles into the present system of politics. The educational system of the country will also be changed. Development of personality will be the dominating principle. Unity in religion will be perhaps the greatest result of this new movement in the youth of the land. From these groups of trained young men may come the unifying of our social institutions under Christian principles and actuated by Christian motives, the solution of the vexing racial differences, and the final outlawing of war and all that causes dissension and evil in the human race.

In closing the speaker said that denominational colleges do not offer in their various courses the Christian principles and Christian ideas which should be there.

Two of the best speakers of the Convention will be on the program this evening, Rev. Manson Doyle, of Toronto and Mr. Roy Burkhart of Chicago.
