Pulitzer Prize Novel "Eyes In The Night" Presents New Twist In Detective Films

The graphic story of a young man who found his real self only when he had broken his mother's heart, weaved the family fortunes and brought unhappiness to the man who loved him is dramatically covered in RKO Radio's "The Magnificent Ambersons" opening today at the Capitol Theatre.

Based on the Pulitzer prize-winning novel by Booth Tarkington, adapted, produced and directed by Orson Welles, the story covers the period from 1885 to 1913 during which Mid-west America was being changed from a rural to an industrial community by the advent of the automobile.

The six top roles, all of equal importance, are portrayed by Joseph Cotten, Tim Holt, Dolores Costello, Anne Baxter, Richard Bennett and Agnes Moorehead.

Seek Invention

The story deals with the machinations of spies seeking the secret of an invention by Reginald Denny.

THE KIRK OF ST. JAMES

Yesterday the Palm Sunday festival was observed at Holy Dick of Divine Worship in the Kirk in the morning the Minister preached on the Passion of our Lord and in the evening on the Triumphant Entry of our Lord, taking as his text, St. Matthew 21:3 "a colt, the foal of an ass". "I close by suggesting that this act of Palm Sunday may be rich in guidance and comfort for today. For as I look out on national and international life today, I see a cleavage which is ever deepening. I see on the one hand that world of precedent which we enoble with the name of law and order. I see a world of immemorial usage, and ancient right and centuries of discipline. And I see another world of wild and turbulent forces, wakening into the consciousness of power, untrained in action because unused to action, untouched by the mellowing discipline of years. On the one hand the calm of ancient privilege and the quiet assumption of ancestral order. On the other hand rebellion and unrest, as of some wayward and unbroken beast. My fellow citizens, it may be very terrible, but for the Christian it is thrilling as the dawn. We serve a Lord who chose to carry Him the rudest and most undisciplined of creatures. And so when I, a lover of the ancient, when I am tempted to distrust the future and moan the passing of an ancient order, I think of Him who, on that Sunday long ago chose the colt to bring Him. His triumph, a triumph that led by the bloody way of Calvary, to the joy of a new heaven and a new earth."

CHAPTER XX

IN A DITCH. ADVENTURE

It was quickly growing dark when the two men got near enough to Monkford's cottage though there was little real darkness until the mid-June nights a small dry ditch gave them reasonably good cover.

Comparatively comfortable though they were, neither Bill nor Benny enjoyed the vigil. The time went slowly, as it always does when one is just waiting for something to happen. As they watched Bill allowed his fancy to wander. In his mind's eye he saw the people who had lived on the marshes from the dawn of history. Then, realizing that, as they had probably did not exist till a much later date, he revised the picture. His mind moved forward. He saw the Roman soldiers leaping from their boats to the mud and sand of the bay, saw them building the old castle at Newborough.

Later came Augustine and Christianity, then in succession, other invaders.

He got no further. At the moment when Bill lost consciousness, snuggling down into a big soft bed. He also got no further, but accompanied Lorbrook into the land of nod. There two skilfully-wielded sardabags had done the trick. Bill had experienced just a split second of warning in which he had been told what fools they had been to overlook the possibility of their being watched and attacked from the rear.

When he regained consciousness it seemed to Lorbrook that he was likely to have ample time for reflection. Time, if he wanted it, to run over in some detail the whole history of the district. It was still night, but the few hours of darkness were passing, and there was already a faint lightness in the patch of sky observable through the high aperture in the wall opposite.

Plenty of time to think but all the while his head hurt so badly he was not likely to avail himself of the opportunity. His temples were throbbing, and as soon as he had taken a quick look round he had closed his eyes and shuddered with pain. He tried to move his hands to take the weight of his head in them, but they were too stiff. He had been very carefully tied.

A stirring at his side told him that Benny was with him and was also beginning to take an interest in life once more.

"Ooo!" Benny groaned. "My head!"

"Shut up!" Bill commanded. "We're in a spot. Speak quietly!"

"Oh, my head!" was the response, slightly subdued.

"My head is as bad as yours."

who plays Miss Harding's husband, Miss Reed is her stepdaughter. The girl is infatuated with a matinee idol, and when he is murdered accuses her stepmother, who appeals to Arnold. The latter with his uncanny sixth sense traces the criminals, who trap him and Denny, with the two women, in Denny's home. About to murder Arnold, they are foiled when he battles them, using his sense of hearing, in the dark, and a dramatic climax sees their arrest. Arnold is aided by Friday, a "seeing eye" dog, almost human in intelligence. Miss Harding is beautiful and a compelling actress. Miss Reed handles her role with skill and Denny plays a straight dramatic characterization ably.

Help Keep Fit by Keeping THE KIDNEYS in Good Order

Nowadays most people realize that to keep well is usually simpler, safer, more pleasant and less costly than to try to "get well."

A healthy, well-regulated system resists many ailments to which a less sturdy constitution may fall victim. Because of this, more and more men and women are using Dodd's Kidney Pills at regular intervals. By so doing they feel that they are helping to keep their kidneys in good order, so that poisonous waste matter and excess acids may be cleaned from the system, and possible illness avoided.

It is a wise health safeguard to use Dodd's Kidney Pills from time to time. Dodd's Kidney Pills are not habit-forming, safe and easy to use.
