"Chatterault died this morning," the King pursued. "He had been asking to see you, but when he was told that you had left Toulouse, he dictated a long confession of his misdeeds, which he sent to me together with this note of yours. He could not, he wrote, permit his heirs to enjoy your estates; he had not won them; he had really forfeited his own stakes, since he had broken the rules of play. He has left me to deliver judgment in the matter of his own lands, passing into your possession. What do you say to it, Marcel?"

"The decision does you honour. It was what I had hoped from you. Go now, Marcel. I doubt he you are eager. When your love-lessness wanes a little we shall hope to see you at Court again."

"I had kissed his hands; I had poured forth my thanks; I had reached the door already, and he was in the act of turning to La Fosse, when it came into my head to glance at the warrant he had given me. He noticed this and my sudden halt."

"You—your wife a quiet dresser?" "Yes! She is still she starts putting on her corsets, then she starts yelling."

"All man, what is it?" he demanded. "I ventured, and I returned to the table. 'I am already so grateful that I hesitate to ask an additional favour. Yet it is but a trifle, and it will not materially affect the sentence itself.'"

"All of it will not be necessary, Your Majesty."

"I glanced at it. The warrant now stipulated that Madame la Vicomtesse de Lavedan should bear her husband company in his exile."

"I approached Lavedan that day. I had been taken with a great, overwhelming shame at the bargain I had driven. I had pondered, and it had come to me that she had been right to suggest that in matters of love what is not freely given is not worth while to take. And out of my shame and that conclusion had sprung a new resolve. So that nothing might weaken it, and "I am very glad of it, monsieur. I withdrew my hand sharply. I took up my hat from the chair on which I had cast it. She might have spared me that, I thought. She need not have professed joy at my going. I loved her like my hand and parted in kindness. 'Adieu, mademoiselle!' I said again, as stiffly as might be, and turned towards the door. 'Monsieur!' she called after me. 'I halted. 'Mademoiselle?' She stood demurely, with eyes downcast and hands folded. 'I shall be so lonely here. I stood still. I seemed to stiffen. My heart gave a mad throb of hope, then seemed to stop. What did she mean? I faced her fully once more, and I doubt not, I was very pale. Yet I felt vanity should be fool me, I dared not act upon suspicious. And so—

ELECTION CARD

TO THE ELECTORS of the City of Charlottetown:
 Ladies and Gentlemen:

Complying with the request of a large number of electors, I am again a candidate for the Majority at the Civic Election to be held on February 10th, 1926; and through this medium respectfully solicit your influence and support at the Polls.

Having been officially connected with civic affairs since 1889, I have seen service in about all the various branches of the administration including a term at the Water Commissioners Board, and, as I have apparently discharged the duties entrusted to me to your satisfaction, I appeal to you on this occasion with confidence, feeling that I shall not do so in vain.

Complying with the intention of the "Ballot Act," I have never made a personal canvass, but have placed myself in the hands of a free and intelligent electorate. Such is my position on this occasion.

With my general knowledge of civic requirements, I see much that can be done—even with our financial limitations—that will greatly add to the improvement of our city, and supply demands so justly made by our paying citizens.

While in hearty accord with the system of Permanent Streets, yet, this work should not be proceeded with to the neglect of our Clay Streets.

The Tourist Association is an institution doing a wonderful work for our City, and Province, and, if we cannot aid it as much financially as we would wish, we can do a great service by giving it our hearty moral support in making our city more attractive, and by showing every courtesy to those who may visit us. This is a trade which other provinces are spending thousands of dollars to secure, and find the money profitably spent. It is plainly our duty to be alive to this opportunity, and make Charlottetown the distributing centre.

Those who are acquainted with our financial affairs will agree with me that prudent economy must be the watchword for the next few years, but it does not follow that we should stand still while there is work to be done to keep pace with progress.

Should you honor me with election to the office of Mayor, I will exert my best efforts to safeguard your interests, while endeavoring to reflect your intelligence to the best of my ability in maintaining the dignity of the office.

Faithfully yours,
 L. B. MILLER

27-1-1926.

To the Electors Of The City Of Charlottetown

Ladies and Gentlemen:— I am in the field, as a candidate for Mayor at the coming Civic Election. With a record of twelve years continuous service as Councillor for Ward Three, including four years as Chairman of the Street Committee and eight years Chairman of the Fire Committee, I feel that I am justified in seeking your votes for the highest office in the gift of the city.

Should you do me the honor of electing me I shall endeavor to justify the confidence which you have reposed in me, and to give my support to a policy of improvement in our Civic Departments consistent with our revenue.

As it will be impossible for me to call upon every elector, I take this opportunity of thanking you for the generous support which you have accorded me in the past, and of soliciting your vote in the present election.

Respectfully yours,
 R. B. RATTRAY,
 7430-26-1-11-71.

"You will be lonely. I regret it." As silence followed, I turned again to the floor, and my hopes sank with each step in that direction. "Monsieur!" Her voice arrested me upon the very threshold. "What shall a poor girl do with this great estate upon her hands? It will go to ruin without a man to govern it." "You must not attempt the task. You must employ an attendant." "I caught something that sounded oddly like a sob. Could it be? But could it be after all. Yes? I would not presume I half turned again, but her voice detained me. It came petulantly now. "Monsieur de Bardelys, you have kept your promise nobly. Will you pay no payment?" Her eyes were lifted for a second. Their blue depths seemed dim. Then they fell again. "Oh, why will you not help me?" She burst out, to add more softly: "I shall never be happy without you." "You mean?" I gasped, retracing a step, and flinging my hat in a corner. "That I love you, Marcel—that I want you!" "And you can forgive—you can forgive?" I cried, as I caught her. Her answer was a laugh that bespoke her scorn of everything—of everything save us two of everything save our love. That and the point of her red lips was her answer. And if the temptation of those lips—but there! I grow indiscreet. Still holding her, I raised my voice. "Ganymede!" I called. "Monsieur?" came his answer through the open window. "Did those knaves dismount and unsaddle?" THE END

Successful Winter Feeding Requires Imperials

The "Power Foods," which supply energy and strength, are a necessity for your breeding foxes at this time. All the energy and strength must come from food and chiefly from one class of foods called "Carbohydrates." From one-third to one-half of the foxes' diet should be made up of them.

IMPERIAL COD LIVER OIL FOX BISCUIT ranks very high in carbohydrates and is the correct cereal to feed at this season. IMPERIALS are also rich in vitamins and mineral salts, both absolutely necessary for healthy, vigorous foxes.

Best Results in Reproduction

are obtained from the regular feeding of IMPERIALS during the gestation period, as they are laxative and have a cooling effect on the blood. Feed the morning meal of dry IMPERIALS. Milk and pure water are always essential in a fox ranch.

IMPERIALS are sold by leading distributors or direct from the factory.
