Newfoundland's Ballad Recounts Loss of Skipper

(By The Canadian Press) ST. JOHN'S, Nov. 25.—Newfoundlanders like to tell of the exploits and the tragedies of their seamen in ballads, not always of literary perfection but always with a tang of the salt and a stirring quality that compensates for any poetical inadequacy.

The latest to reach the public eye through the columns of the St. John's Telegram, tells of the loss of Captain Abram Carbage from the little schooner Yale. It reads as follows:

Ye hardy sons of Newfoundland, who spend your days at sea, Attend unto my simple lines, of brave deeds, and tragedy, The seventh of October last just at the break of day, Abram Carbage in his little ketch from St. John's sailed away—Bound for the coast of Labrador, on a trading voyage bent. One man he had to help him, John Hickman was his name—As smart a seaman as could be found, from Burin Harbor came. The wind being from the south-east, they put in sail—And quickly through the Narrows passed in the gallant little "Yale"

The course was set for Bacallue, which place they passed at noon. Then tried to cross Trinity Bay. The wind increased rapidly into a fearful gale. And they were forced by wind and sea, to reef and shorten sail—At ten that night the pump gave a leak, the ketch had sprung a leak. And Hickman went into the hold the cause of which to seek. Just then a foaming billow came o'er the little craft. And swept the deck of everything—That lay both fore and aft. Captain Carbage who was steering was swept away Into the waste of waters raving right across the Bay. When Hickman came to the deck, it was a woeful sight. The Captain gone, the deck a wash. The stoutest heart aghast with fright. He shouted loud in hope to hear some answer to his cries, But waves and shrieking winds alone sent back their dire replies.

There like a true bred seaman, he knew just what to do. To save his life and vessel—he put the ketch "head to" And all that night till dawn of day—He bailed the water out, He freed the hold and set his sails and put the ketch about. The morning of the eighth was fine, but no land could he see. He set his course by the North Star the wind being west and free. At two that day another gale from north-west fiercely blew. And he was forced at dark again, to lay the vessel "To"—On the ninth it was fine and clear and he saw land once more. Then Hickman hoisted all his sails, to try and reach the shore—He came within a mile of land, but dangerous looked the place—With rocks and shoals around the coast, he never, dare not face. He hoist a signal of distress, as he saw houses on the strand. And fired five guns in hope they'd hear them on the land. Soon afterwards, four men in boat, hurriedly to find. Poor Hickman weak and suffering from trials of every kind—They towed the "Yale" to Elliston, took Hickman to the shore. Where he was treated tenderly, and restored to health once more. And he will never forget for life, the people of Elliston. Who saved his life, and cured his ills—and all the good they done. And now brave Hickman's home again to wife and children three—And ready for another chance, upon the stormy sea. But sorrow clouds his vision when he thinks of that fearful night. When his Captain, Abram Carbage who was swept from his sight. His body lies in dreamless sleep—beneath the ocean breast. His soul we hope is with his God, in glory and at rest.

PROVERBS OF THE TONGUE.

The boneless tongue, so small and weak, Can crush and kill," declares the Greek. "The tongue destroys a greater hoed," The Persian asserts, "than does the sword."

"The Persian proverb wisely saith, "A lengthy tongue, an early death;" Or sometimes takes this form instead: "Don't let your tongue out off your head."

"The tongue can speak a word whose speed," The Chinese say "outsteps the steed."

While Arab says this impart: "The tongue's great storehouse is the heart."

From Hebrew soil this maxim sprung: "Thought feet should slip, ne'er let the tongue."

The Sacred Writer crowns the whole: "Who keeps his tongue doth keep his soul."

Testing For Oil In Canadian Tar Sands

EDMONTON, Alberta, Nov. 25.—Exhaustive tests are being made of Alberta tar sands which, if successful, will mean—in the cautious language of an economic survey issued by the Alberta Government—"the complete independence of the British Empire for oil."

There are huge deposits of tar sands at Fort McMurray, nearly 300 miles north of Edmonton, and the present experiments are based on a new process for separating the hydrocarbons in the bituminous material. Various steps of the process have been tested before, but this is the first time they have been attempted in unison.

For practical purposes the McMurray tar sands are almost inexhaustible. Their oil content has long been known, and there has been much research into the matter of its isolation by processes commercially feasible. The problem now is on the verge of solution, the importance to Alberta of this great potential industry hardly can be over-estimated.

Trinidad Cattle Menaced By Bats

(By The Canadian Press) PORT OF SPAIN, Trinidad, Nov. 25.—Research has shown that Trinidad's cattle from the scourge of paralytic rabies, caused by blood sucking bats, is being carried on by Professor W. Ulrich for the government.

Some months ago hundreds of animals were afflicted with it. Dr. S. Wise, surgeon general, said deaths of two humans with the last year could be traced to the condition of the cattle. He added that the people should be thankful that they had not been more death in view of the large number of animals afflicted.

The vampire is the only one of 32 varieties of bats in Trinidad that takes warm blood from animals. Prof. Ulrich has found. Bats, he says, are mammals, a they suckle their young. Their bodies are remarkably well adapted for the lives they lead and the food they eat. There is a rudimentary membrane in the hinder portion of their bodies which must help them materially in their flight.

Contrary to popular opinion, the vampire does not suck the blood from its victim but laps it up like a cat. It has special incisor cutting teeth and its method of extracting blood is to lap it up after the fashion of a cat. It systematically settles near its victim, to which it inflates sharp, oval-shaped wounds.

Bats are distinguished by their teeth of different varieties having teeth peculiar to their own species.

ISOLATES GERM OF RARE DISEASE

OTTAWA, Nov. 24.—Through the research work of Dr. Cyril B. Graham, of Cammington, Ont., young country practitioner who with his wife are well-known in Ottawa circles, success has been achieved in isolating the germ which causes the dread and rare "Rabbit disease" or tularemia.

Hitherto it has been impossible to set apart this germ but it has been accomplished by the laboratory of the Provincial Department of Health in co-operation with Dr. Graham. Identification of the germ will now pave the way for the production of a serum for the treatment of the dread disease. For which no treatment has existed. It is a disease that is rarely found in Canada but is said to be increasing in the United States, and often proves fatal.

It was through Dr. Graham's work in sending to the provincial laboratory the swab ever taken from the local lesion in the hand, that isolation of the disease germ has been accomplished, for the first time in Canada.

Mr. Graham was formerly Miss Marion MacFarlane who graduated from Queen's University in 1927.

SCRIPT USED IN BOHEMIA

Libero, Northern Bohemia, is using script in place of money. Many storekeepers and some municipal enterprises have formed an association, the members of which accept script vouchers instead of money. A building contractor, for example may get a voucher for $100 for work done by contract with the town authorities. With this voucher he can pay his rates and taxes, and can, electrically, and the police court. Furthermore, he can use the vouchers to pay wages. The vouchers can be exchanged for $100 for work done by members of the association. The "snag" in the arrangement is that every time a voucher is offered in payment, a deduction of 2 per cent is made from its value, in favor of the association as a whole.

Deadly Snake Annual Meeting Dead At Zoo

(A. P. By Guardian's Special Wire) NEW YORK, Nov. 24.—The Bronx zoo's deadliest snake, the busmaster which Dr. Raymond L. Ditmars brought from Trinidad in September, died today.

A parasite infection brought on pneumonia and caused the snake's death, the zoo veterinarian said. Yesterday the busmaster was noticed gasping, as if unable to take in enough air.

Dr. Ditmars said that tropical rats and small jungle creatures which the snake had eaten before its captivity caused the infection.

Membership fees were then paid for the new year, with four new members joining. The minutes of last meeting were read and adopted. The Sick Committee reported visiting two sick members. The School Committee requested that basin, towels and soap be bought for school. It was moved and seconded that $2.50 be paid to Mrs. Drake for convention expenses.

Princess Marina's Trousseau Altered At Last Minute

PARIS, Nov. 24.—The bride-to-be of the Duke of Kent could give some proven advice to young women who would reduce—prepare to marry a royal prince.

Princess Marina, to be married Nov. 29 in London, has lost so much weight from preparing for the wedding that last minute alterations had to be made in her trousseau.

Social obligations, visits with her friends, and shopping have so filled her days and nights that she has lacked time to eat and sleep properly, a friend disclosed today, and as a result she has become so slender that a number of her dresses have had to be refitted before they were packed for shipment across the channel.

Meanwhile, in London, last minute touches under the personal supervision of the Queen were being given historic old Buckingham Palace in preparation for the arrival of her future daughter-in-law and other guests.

The three-room suite which the royal bride-to-be will occupy on the second floor of the palace, received the special attention of the Queen, and with her own hands she will arrange banks of flowers—mainly chrysanthemums—in the rooms only a few hours before Princess Marina's party arrives from Paris.

In the next-door suite, Princess Marina's parents, the Prince and Princess Nicholas of Greece, will be lodged, and other royal relatives will occupy quarters nearby.

Among the distinguished guests in the palace will be the King and Queen of Denmark, the Grand Duke and Grand Duchess Cyrille of Russia, Prince George and Princess Marie of Greece, Prince Waldemar of Denmark, and Prince and Princess Christian of Greece.

Evening gowns, developed in chiffon, are often embroidered in crystals or rhinestones, set on in little clusters, or scattered over the gown in frosty fashion. White is especially important in this regard.

Canadian Wheat Pools Meeting Their Obligations

WINNIPEG, Nov. 24.—For the third year in succession the wheat pools of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta have met their obligations to the provincial governments, and this debt is being cleared up out of the earnings of the pool elevator systems.

In 1929 the pools paid out to their members some $4,400,000 more than the grain brought when finally sold, through over-estimating market prices in making the usual seasonal advances. A fall in prices before the crop was marketed created crises in the pools and the three governments had to guarantee their indebtedness to the banks. Gradually this debt is being cleared up out of the earnings of the pool elevator systems.

In this triple system there are 1,666 grain elevators and pool terminals, the latter at Great Lakes ports and on the Pacific Coast, built and paid for by the co-operative farmers.

QUINTUPLETS ARE NOW FASHIONED IN SOAP

TORONTO, Nov. 25.—A new shape for soap was on display in Toronto stores today. The soap was fashioned in a manner intended to represent the five little Dionne sisters of Callander, Ont. They displayed five small cakes of soap in the form of babies, picked in a small box wrapped with a miniature pink blanket.

While working on scaffolding around "Big Ben," London's great clock, William Chatterton of Exeter, fell 160 feet to Speaker's Green. He was instantly killed.

Dice Game Not A New Invention

HALIFAX, Nov. 24.—(By The Canadian Press)—Trends of the time don't change much through the centuries; not in Nova Scotia, anyway. For it appears now that when the Mic-Mac braves of a few centuries ago returned home from a hard day's hunting in the forests they liked also to spend a blither on the tepee floor and shoot crap.

Well, perhaps not exactly the same game we call crap today, but certainly it was some approximation of the gambling dice game, for a complete set of authentic Indian dice has been presented to the Nova Scotia Museum.

They are real "bones"—carved from the boiled shin-bones of a moose. There are six pieces to the set, flat on one side and convex on the other, and with the flat surface inscribed with strange Indian markings. With them the Mic-Macs played a game called "Altestakum."

The set came into the possession of the Museum after the death of Mrs. Andrew Abram, of Truro, N. S. reservation. The 93-year-old woman had had them in her possession for a half century.

Job For Women In Civic Life

(By The Canadian Press) WINNIPEG, Nov. 24.—"I want to encourage you to be aldermen," said Alderman Margaret MacWilliams to the University Women's Club. There is a real job for women in civic administration, she believes, for women look at things differently from men.

Mrs. MacWilliams instigated the case of having a social worker put on the supervisory staff for unemployment work. Children and young girls were involved in the cases which came before the relief committee—cases that a social worker could have solved in the homes, without bringing the story to the city hall.

On one occasion a trained social worker was "borrowed from one of the city's agencies," immediately 10 of the inside staff workers asked her to give them a course at night. Mrs. MacWilliams admitted that she "had not spoken six times in council, and never in committee, after she had made her point clear." But she had served on 33 sub-committees, so the "men must have considered that a woman could take her share of the load."

"Hurdles" she had had to clear were: "Never indulging in the luxury of talking for more persuasion, the foregoing conclusion that she was a 'highbrow' and a managing female," and that her attitude on all relief matters would be one of sentimentalism. How much had been done in removing these obstacles, how far she had been accepted by her fellow aldermen and forgiven for being a woman, Mrs. MacWilliams said she would leave to the University club to decide.
