The total fall of the two days is 3 1/10 inches, and still the rain was falling heavily early this morning and showed no signs of abatement.

THE FIRST PLUG HAT

It Caused a Riot and Arrest—Popularity Seems on the Wane

The shiny silk cylindrical hat, some times called "topper," "high hat," "plug," "high dicker," "stovepipe" or "four-gallon hat" by the irreverent, seems fast to disappear, after little more than one century of existence in England, the place of its origin, it was long esteemed the very highest badge of respectability, so much admired that "varsity crews rowed races and varsity elevens played cricket in correct, shiny bell-toppers.

This form of headgear was first seen in London on January 15, 1797, when John Hetherington, a haberdasher, emerged from his shop in the Strand wearing a silk hat, and was promptly surrounded by an astonished mob of such proportions that he was arrested and charged before the Lord Mayor with inciting to riot.

The officer who arrested Hetherington testified that he "appeared upon a public highway wearing upon his head a tall silk structure, which he called a silk hat, having a shiny luster, and calculated to frighten timid people. Several women fainted at the unusual sight, which children screamed, dogs yelped, and a young son of Cordwalner Thomas who was returning from a chandler's shop, was thrown down by the crowd which collected and had his right leg broken." The defendant pleaded that he was merely exercising a right possessed by every Englishman, to appear in any head-dress he chose, and that he did not violate any law. He was nevertheless, bound over in $2,500 to keep the peace. This verdict aroused the wrath of the Times. In its issue of January 16, 1797, the hat worn by Hetherington is described as "an advance in dress reform, and one which is bound, sooner or later, to stamp its character upon the entire community. The new hat is destined to work a revolution in headgear, and we think the officers of the Crown erred in placing the defendant under arrest."

STOLEN RELIC WORTH A FORTUNE

Sacred Persian "Mihrab" Now in Possession of London Collector—Cost a Human Life

Stolen almost tile by tile from the Mosque of the Market Place at Kashan, the greater part of a Persian Mihrab, to which every Mohammedan worshipper makes obeisance, has found a resting place in London.

Rectangular in shape, measuring 9 feet 4 inches by 6 feet, the antique consists principally of silver and gold lustre tiles for which the Persians were famous, and was built into the wall of the mosque, pointing directly towards Mecca.

The bulk of the Mihrab is in the hands of Mr. John Richard Preece, who was formerly Consul-General at Ispaham.

Mr. B. W. Stainton, who was associated with Mr. Preece in mining his collection, says that in 1879 this Mihrab was intact, but on inspecting it again a piece had disappeared. Portions continued to disappear mysteriously despite the presence of guards, until it was nearly all gone. Probably the watchmen were in league with the robbers. One special guard was killed mysteriously at his post, and three others were drugged.

"In the early eighties a servant in the Government employ offered Mr. Preece a beautiful tile, but refused to divulge the source from which it was obtained and how. Through a period of nearly twenty years similar relics were brought to him and purchased. Then one day, being in the mosque at Kashan, he discovered that his pieces had been picked from the wall, and the Mihrab so depleted that the authorities were induced to sell the remnants to him."

These are parts missing, and the collectors holding them refuse to sell, so rare and beautiful is the work. The Mihrab comprises over ninety pieces, and the value placed upon it is from $75,000 to $100,000. The design is of a door within a door, and inscriptions in blue from the Koran are in three languages—Kufic, Karmati, and Naskhy. It was executed in the thirteenth century by one Hassan, and the art is not practised now amongst the Persians.

UNCANNY REMEDIES

Days When Viper Broth and Spider Pills Were in the Pharmacopoea

Quaint medical remedies which were popular in bygone days were described at the City of London School by Dr. F. M. Sandwith, Gresham Professor of Physic, in a lecture on "Drugs Old and New."

After pointing out that herbs supplied the first drugs, the lecturer described how animal products were accepted as medicines, some even remaining in the first English pharmacopoea published in 1618. Tiger's flesh and new-born puppies were among the old remedies: "One book recommended a live spider to be rolled in butter and formed into a pill and then swallowed, as an antidote to jaundice. Vipers were held in high esteem, and a broth made from them was said to strengthen the sight. In the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries powdered mummies were prescribed.

In some of the older herbal works a striking fact was the constant recommendation of remedies for bruises, which gave some idea of the manners of the day. John Gerrard, who was chief gardener of Lord Burligh's garden in the Strand, and had a garden of his own in Holborn, published a book in 1597 which recommended "Solomon's seal" for taking away in one night the blackness of bruises caused by falls "or woman's wilfulness in tumbling upon their hasty husbands' fists, or such like!"

Peer Sells Big Estate

Lord Joicey's Gregynog estate, Montgomeryshire, which comprises 16,000 acres, worth $60,000 a year, net, was privately sold for $1,350,000. The timber alone is valued at $240,000. This was the property on which Lord Sudley spent a large fortune. Lord Joicey also expended a very large sum upon the place after he acquired it. As a result it is one of the model estates in the kingdom, the 320 farms which it includes all being in excellent order. Although the property was disposed of, the tenants still have an opportunity of acquiring their holdings.

Famous Agitation Recalled

A famous incident of the long conflict between Berwick fishermen and Tweed bailiffs is recalled by the death of Mr. William Patterson, Berwick, who was one of two men who were wounded by a shot fired from a Government gunboat. Deceased was one of the crew of a fishing boat which, on ignoring the gunboat's order to lie to, was fired at, and Patterson was wounded.

SIXTEEN LIVES SUPPOSED LOST

EDMONTON, Oct. 13.—The Hudson Bay company's tug, Primrose, which piles on Lake Athabasca, between Fort Chipewyan and Fort Lu Lac, and also on Slave river, is reported missing and believed to have foundered with all on board, sixteen in all.

The Primrose left Fort Chipewyan for Fort Fond Du Lac about September 17 with two crews laden with supplies. The round trip is usually four days or a week at the most. Twenty-five days have elapsed and as nothing has been heard of the tug the worst is feared.

THE BEST DIGGERS

The Gopher of the Plains Wonderful Little Creature

It is said that, of all living creatures, the gopher is the one most perfectly adapted to digging in the ground. This creature is short-legged, almost neckless, without visible ears, and with extremely small eyes. In its tunneling work the gopher employs its long and powerful front teeth as a pick to loosen the ground. At the same time the fore teeth, which are armed with long, curved claws, the sides of the toes being lined, in turn with bristles that prevent the passage of dirt between them, are hard at work both in digging and in pressing the dirt back under the body. There the hind feet take it and push it farther back.

When a sufficient quantity of earth has been accumulated in the rear of the gopher, the animal whirls about and by bringing his "wrists" together under his chin, with the palms of the "hands" held vertically, he pushes the earth out in front. A gopher will move backward just as rapidly as forward, and he can push the soil either way. His movements in excavation are almost as rapid and automatic as those of a shuttle. It has been estimated that a pocket-gopher can make two hundred complete strokes with his teeth in one minute. The jaws are so arranged that thirty-eight distinct single cuts are made by the forward stroke of the jaw, and twenty-eight by the backward stroke. Thus, it will be seen, the jaws of this curious little creature may accomplish a grand total of thirteen thousand two hundred cuts a minute when in active operation. He is immensely destructive to crops, and is, therefore, not popular.

The pocket-gopher digs as long as he lives, extending his burrow from year to year. He digs all summer and generally all winter, since he is not a hibernating animal. All his life is practically passed underground, except when, for an instant, on rare occasions, he emerges into the air to push a load of earth from a freshly opened hole. But he vanishes so quickly that it might be said he is never seen.

If a gopher in captivity finds a whole potato he will cut off little slices, trimming them to suitable shape with his sharp teeth, and transfer them to his cheek-pouches by a swift movement. To remove them from the pouch he presses his fore feet firmly against the sides of his head and carries them rapidly forward, dumping the contents of the pouches on the ground before him. These pouches are often packed so full of bits of roots, stems and leaves as to give the gopher a strongly distorted appearance.

GREEN FOOD FOR HENS

If you have some hens, and want eggs, you must feed your chickens green food. During the summer and early fall you can give them plenty of grass cuttings, but during winter and early spring months there is nothing green out-of-doors.

The best way to supply the necessary green stuff is to buy some oats or wheat, make a bed of boards and raise your own food for the hens.

On the bottom of the shallow box put several layers of newspapers, liberally watered. Sow the oats or wheat, overnight in water and spread them on the wet newspapers. Sprinkle often. In about four days the grain will begin to sprout. A few days farther along will see the green shoots several inches high. Cut off as much as needed, taking both grain and sprouts; feed well scattered so that each hen will get a share.

A good plan is to have more than one sprouting bed, so that while you are feeding one another may be growing up and still another may be starting to sprout.

Keep them in the warmest spot in the cellar and in the sunshine if possible.
