The successful young lady is at present spending her vacation with her parents at their summer home at Lake Annis, Nova Scotia.

A HOUSE TO HOUSE CANVASS FOR L. OF NATIONS PETITION—At a joint meeting yesterday of representatives of the Catholic Women's League and the Daughters of the Empire it was decided to arrange for a house to house canvass of Charlottetown for signatures to the League of Nations petition for disarmament. This canvass, which will be held at an early date, was thought to be a more effective method than the proposed plan of securing signatures at the polls on election day. This arrangement is for Charlottetown only. The remainder of the Province will adopt the original plan.

Damning Revelations
 (Toronto Mail and Empire)

The report of the Beauharnois committee, embodies a plain, unimpassioned recital of the facts brought out at the recent prolonged investigation. It shows that as early as 1926 there were consultations amongst those at first interested as to how and through whom political influence could be secured and exerted at Ottawa and Quebec. With this unsatisfactory beginning the project steadily grew more unwholesome in its ramifications. Finally the situation resulted in the revelations which have now shocked the country.

The facts sworn to are that with or without the knowledge of a Liberal Prime Minister, his political friends trafficked in the ownership of the Canadian section of the St. Lawrence River to the end that they amassed wealth for themselves and enriched the federal Liberal treasury by over $700,000. The promoters of the Beauharnois enterprise paid over the money to prominent Liberals and it cannot be a mere coincidence that they secured carte blanche to go ahead with a great power scheme which was destined to divert the whole flow of the St. Lawrence.

At or about the same time, or shortly afterwards, the Federal Conservative organization rejected $200,000 from the same source. These statements are part of the evidence, as is also the statement that $125,000 handed to Mr. John Aird, Jr., allegedly for Ontario Conservatives, never reached the Conservative treasury and never was heard of by the Conservative party managers. It came out that campaign contributions of smaller amounts were made to and received by Quebec Conservatives. Having all this evidence in mind, only hopeless cynics will argue that both parties were in the same box.

Australian Pact Approved
 (Sydney Post)

The trade treaty between Canada and Australia was put through all the legislative stages in the House of Commons on Wednesday with record despatch. It evoked little discussion, and was given second reading, committee consideration, and third reading, at the one sitting of the House. It may therefore be assumed that it meets with the approval of all Parliamentary parties and groups.

When submitting for second reading the bill ratifying the treaty, Premier Bennett said that two basic principles had been observed in drafting its terms. One was that such commodities as each Dominion produces and the other requires shall be given special tariff preference by the importing country. The other was that such a tariff level may be maintained by each country with respect to its own products as will give it adequate protection in the home market.

Recognition of these two principles constitutes the best guarantee of the permanence of the pact. No trade agreement can stand the test of experience which contemplates the "swapping of jack-knives." Reciprocal dealings require to be carried out in such a way as to insure an exchange of commodities which are not competitive with one another in kind or quality. The fatal weakness of the former Canadian-Australian treaty was that it did not recognize or make allowance for this fundamental principle. It permitted Australian, and as subsequently extended New Zealand butter, to be imported into Canada on payment of the nominal duty of 1 cent per pound, while the general Canadian tariff on butter was only 3 cents and afforded no effective protection to the domestic producer. The consequence was that Canada was deluged with New Zealand butter, and the dairying industry of this country was almost destroyed. Under the new treaty there is to be a duty of 5 cents per pound on Australian butter, as against the general tariff rates against other countries of 8 cents per pound. This should afford ample protection to the Canadian butter producers, but if experience shows that it does not, there is a provision in the treaty under which the Canadian duty may be increased without prejudice to the other items comprised in the pact. The agreement has been drafted with the utmost care, and as there is perfect accord between the two Governments as to the objects each has in view, there is little likelihood of future friction or dissatisfaction on either side.

Mr. A. D. Cartwright, Secretary, Board of Railway Commissioners, Ottawa; Mrs. Cartwright and son Mr. Robert, have arrived at Shaw's Hotel, Brackley Beach. It is thirty-one years since Mr. and Mrs. Cartwright first came to Shaw's, and they have returned every year but one since.

London Letter

BY GLANVILLE CAREW
 (British United Press)

LONDON, Aug. 3.—The Labor Government of Great Britain takes great pride in what it calls its success in the handling of foreign affairs. In the beginning Mr. Ramsay MacDonald claimed most of the personal credit and pointed to the Naval Disarmament Conference held in London as the child of his own creation and the justification for his existence. Since then internal problems have withdrawn the Premier from the foreign limelight and today it is Mr. Arthur Henderson, familiarly and almost affectionately known as "Uncle Arthur" who holds the stage. The policies which he pursues have been criticized and his methods have been denounced but upon one thing all parties in this country and most parties in other countries are agreed and that is that "Uncle Arthur" can be trusted. In this he has succeeded to the reputation which Sir Austen Chamberlain, his predecessor at the Foreign Office, so well held during the last administration.

There is something peculiar that an iron ruler from Newcastle-on-Tyne born in most humble surroundings and working for a living from a very early age should have reached a position when he enjoys the confidence of foreign statesmen. Henderson never revealed in his early political years any liking for foreign affairs. He made his way to one of the chief executive positions in the Labor Party by his astute management of men, his sound knowledge of how a political machine should work, and the fact that he could be trusted. His first foreign adventures were with European Socialist organisations but many other leaders of British Labor were more entitled and better equipped to pursue the path which brought him to the position of the chief of the Foreign Office.

It was Lloyd George, who by a typical Lloyd George device was, unknown to the public, responsible in 1917 when Henderson was a member of the War Cabinet. Lloyd George wanted to get rid of him. He persuaded Henderson that his valuable services would be better used if he went to Russia to see how the Kerensky Government was progressing and whether Sir George Buchanan, the British Ambassador, at Petrograd was a fit person to deal with the Russian upheaval as His Majesty's representative. Henderson listened to the enchantments of Lloyd George, went to Russia with a letter authorizing him to remove the Ambassador if necessary, and came to a very rapid conclusion that Sir George should remain, so rapid indeed that the night after he arrived his signed photograph was on the Embassy table. Then Henderson discovered how Lloyd George had got rid of him. He was kept in ignorance of what was happening in Britain and when he returned to London Lloyd George turned it to great profit. Henderson now laughs at the story and Lloyd George and everybody admits he can well afford to do so. He recalls that when the German ministers came to Chequers for a week-end with MacDonald and himself they told him they heard the crowds at Victoria calling out "Good old Uncle Arthur." He also knows that he is well in the running for the Premiership when MacDonald goes.

The House of Commons which has suffered many attacks for its declining prestige throughout the country and has been accused of dullness when members have asserted they do not get a fair publicity show in the press has suddenly become an arena of brightness. It did not like the extensive publicity it received when Mr. J. McGovern, the Glasgow Irishman, was forcibly ejected and members are now trying to secure the passage of a bill which will deprive members of their salaries and railroad privileges during the time that the House is deprived of their company by the suspension enforced by the Speaker. It has since revealed in the publicity given to an all-night session which showed the zeal of members for the public weal.

Still chastened by the McGovern incident members were cheered and astonished to see Mr. T. B. Ramsay, the Liberal member for the Western Isles, enter the House in full Highland costume. He had been at a Scottish dinner before going to the House and refusing to return to the conventional, boldly swaying through the doors showing a fine pair of knees. He was greeted with much enthusiasm until one member, still suffering from the McGovern affray, espied a skean dhu (or dirk) worn on the right leg. An attendant was informed and Mr. Ramsay was told that members were not permitted to carry any other weapon than their tongues, and it was removed. Mr. Ramsay surrendered without argument, thereby setting a noble example in reasonableness and tactfulness which others might follow.

Brightness, however, is sometimes associated with bitterness in the House. During the all night sitting Mr. J. H. Thomas was seen to be nodding his head which earned him the disapproval of Mr. W. J. Brown, who, although a member of the Labor Party, attacks ministers with much venom. Mr. Thomas retorted that if he did not nod he would go to sleep. "Do," said Mr. Brown, "and follow the tradition of twenty years of going to sleep when the working class interests are concerned." To which there was no reply. The time will come, however, and then it will be a case of heaven help Mr. Brown.

Sad are the times for men's hairdressers. They don't make as much money as those who attend to women and unless they are Jews they must not open on Sundays. The City Town Planning Committee of Oxford has imposed a further restriction. An Oxford hairdresser or barber wished to advertise by a illuminated sign that he cut "Gents' Hair. This so-called to him polite, dignified and complimentary has been told by the Committee, however, that he must use the word "Men" or he would not be allowed to erect the sign at all. The word "Gents" is extensively used by tailors in Britain and they are wondering where they will get it from Mr. Stanley Baldwin who on one occasion explained that he did not understand the term "Intelligentsia" but presumed it bore the same resemblance to intelligents as gent did to gentlemen. The City Town Planning Committee belong to the intelligentsia in this case.

Hunnefield With Fourth Club
 Hunnefield has played with four major league clubs this season, and seems likely to get his first share of World Series money.

Before the season opened the Chicago White Sox sent Hunnefield to the Toledo American Association club. Cleveland brought him back to the majors, but he failed to fill the breach at short stop in the Indians' infield. The Boston Braves claimed Hunnefield and used him in a few games.

When Hughie Critz was injured the New York Giants obtained Hunnefield on waivers from the Braves. Hunnefield has patched up the weak place in the Giants' infield, and probably will stick with the club as a substitute infielder even after Critz returns to his place at second base.

Cast adrift by the Athletics, John P. Quinn, oldest ball player in the majors, caught on with Brooklyn, a serious contender for the National League flag, and may share in another World Series at 46. He has pitched in three World Series, for the Yankees in 1921 and the Athletics in 1929 and 1930, but never won a game.

HUNTER ISLAND, ONTARIO
 Hunter Island is the name applied to the huge peninsula in Rainy River District, Ontario, adjacent to the international boundary. It would be an island but for the narrow hinge of land on the boundary known as Swamp portage. The records of the Geographic Board of Canada take the name back to 1855 when it occurs as Hunters island on a map in an atlas published in London, England, by George Cox. If the meaning is the same as that of other Hunter Islands in Canada, it would imply that travellers found game plentiful in the region.

AWNING SAVES MAN'S LIFE
 SEATTLE, Aug. 3.—John Kavanaugh, 26, had an awning to thank when he woke up with nothing more than a sore head after he had fallen 25 feet and landed on the pavement. He passed through an awning on the way to the street and this partly broke the force of his fall.

Alids Banks of Emission
 The Bank of International Settlements at Basel, aside from the handling of reparation payments, works especially in conjunction with the banks of emission of the various European countries. The fundamental object of this is to insure the stability of the currency and exchange of each country.

The International Bank of Agricultural Credits in turn will cooperate largely with those banks in each country that are in the habit of granting credits on agricultural lands and by rediscouinting the paper of the latter render longer credits and better rates of interest possible.

Finally the new International Bank of Exportations, with a capital of $100,000,000, which the European Union Commission proposes to create, will work with similar institutions in the various countries largely through the rediscouinting of loans which they have made in order to enable local industries to re-establish themselves and engage in extensive exportations.
