Advice to a Prospective Bride

Dorothy Dix

Gives Recipe for Domestic Happiness

"The Husband Pattern of a Man is Settled During the First Year of Marriage, and Ever After He Treats His Wife as She Has Taught Him During That Time"

You are going to be married, daughter, and your happiness and well being for the next thirty or forty or fifty years depends upon how you train your husband. It is a great pity that there isn't a HUSBAND BOOK that is a manual for brides to follow on how to bring up a husband as there is a BABY BOOK that is the law and gospel to young mothers on how to rear their children. For, in a way, young husbands and young babies are much alike. They both come into a world of which they know nothing and in which they have had no experience and they do not know what to expect or what is expected of them, and when they are new they are soft and yielding and easy to mold. They are both even as dough in the hands of the wife or mother to whom they look for sustenance and material comfort, but they soon harden into form and in six months they can both be irretrievably spoiled and turned into grinding tyrants.

Behaviorists tell us that the life pattern of a child is fixed in the first year or two of its existence. Certainly the husband pattern of a man is settled during the first year of marriage and ever afterward he treats his wife as she has taught him during that time to treat her and observes the customs, manners and habits that she has impressed upon his plastic bride-groom soul.

Most husbands' faults are the result of sheer ignorance. Men don't marry women deliberately to make them unhappy, and when they are selfish and inconsiderate and overbearing and ill-mannered and trample roughshod over their wives' feelings, it is not because they are malevolent, but simply because they have not been taught any better.

So, daughter, if you want to be happy though married start on your wedding day to bring your husband up in the way he should go and when you celebrate your golden wedding he will not have departed therefrom.

Begin while he is still in a melting mood during the honeymoon by settling the allowance question and getting your fair share of the family income for running the house and for your own personal behoof and benefit. That will save 365 breakfast-table fights a year and do more than any other one thing to keep him from looking upon you as a hold-up artist and to prevent you from regretting that you ever swapped off a good-pay job for a wedding ring.

Few men count the cost of a family in dollars and cents before marriage. They have a vague and romantic idea that every woman is a sort of miracle worker who can run a house and set a good table on air, and they get the shock of their lives when they find out that matrimony is mostly one darn bill after another.

Brides sense this, and wishing to wear their halo as long as possible and hating to discuss such a sordid thing as finances with a man who is still a lover, they let the money question go by, with the disastrous result that they have fixed in their husbands' minds the idea that they are nothing but upper servants who don't even have to be paid wages and who are expected to work for such board and clothes as their lords and masters see fit to give them. They could just as easily have established their status as partners with their husbands if they had insisted on that when they were first married.

Next, teach your husband to treat you with respect. A man puts the woman he asks to be his wife on a pedestal, and if she has a grain of sense in her head she never climbs down off it. She sits there and keeps him burning incense before her as long as she lives.

Every husband treats his wife exactly as she demands to be treated. If she insists on being treated as a lady, even though she is his wife, he will show her courtesy and speak to her politely, but if she will stand being cursed and sworn at and abused, many a man will vent upon his wife the ill-temper and the rudeness he care not show anybody big and strong enough to thrash him. And the formula for securing a husband who will treat you with deference and respect is just the same as that for securing deferential and respectful children. Never let them start talking back to you.

Teach your husband to respect your individuality and to know that you have as much right to personal freedom as he has. There are a lot of women who might just as well be locked up in a room for all the freedom they have. They are nothing but rubber stamps of their husbands and have to echo husband's opinions and wear the kind of clothes husband picks out for them and can't even cut their hair or powder their noses or do a single thing on their own initiative. They have to have husband's O. K. on everything first.

It is all because they made the wrong beginning by asking their husbands what they thought when they were brides and their husbands got into the way of bossing them, and that is a habit that can never be broken. Therefore, don't cultivate an arrogant spirit in your bridegroom. Don't begin by asking husband's permission to do a thing about which you know a lot more than he does and of which you are a better judge. Don't consult him about everything.

Use your own mind. Do your own thinking. All that concerns him is the results. He will have a lot more respect for you if you are a self-starting human being than he will if you are a dummy for which he has to supply the motive power and the brains.

Be good to your husband, but don't pamper him too much. Be unselfish toward him, but don't make all of the sacrifices. I have known wives who stayed at home and never went anywhere or had any pleasure until their husbands got the idea that it was a crime for them to go out anywhere farther away than the market and that they got all the kick out of life they wanted in cooking and sewing and scrubbing. And I have known women who did without pretty clothes and went shabby until their husbands thought they preferred to be dowdy.

Therefore, daughter, never let your husband sidetrack you. Begin by stepping out with him and keep it up. Dress just as well as you can possibly afford. Remind him that being married hasn't drawn your sweet tooth and that you like to have a box of candy brought you now and then and that a vacuum cleaner as a birthday present doesn't thrill you as much as a bunch of violets would.

You can even teach your husband to say "thank-y" and to pay you compliments and to be affectionate if you will start training him when you first get him, while he is young and impressionable. Try it, daughter.

For The Cook

Linguist

"I speak four languages," boasted the doorman of a hotel in Rome to an American guest, "Italian, French, English and American!"

"But English and American are the same," protested the guest.

"Not at all," replied the man. "If an Englishman should come up now, I should talk like this: 'Oh, I say what extraordinarily shocking weather we are having! I dare say there will be a bit of it ahead.' But when you came up I was just getting ready to say: 'For the love o' Mike! Some day, ain't it? Guess this is the second floor all right.'"

Milady Beautiful

FASHIONS IN EYEBROWS

A recent fashion note states that the new vogue for hats that show milady's forehead will stimulate interest in beautifying eyebrows. When hats came down over the eyes nothing could be seen of the eyebrows. Most eyebrows may be improved by the removal of the few straggling hairs that are usually found growing down on the upper eyelid. The very thin, artificial-looking eyebrow is not modish and is very hard to keep neat, as the tiny hairs grow in very quickly and must be tweezed out every few days. A happy medium between this and the thick, unruly eyebrow may be obtained by exercising moderation and artistic taste in using the tweezers.

Before the plucking is done, a little cold cream may be rubbed into the roots, or a warm-water compress may be applied. The hairs should be removed one at a time with a quick jerk. They should be grasped by the tweezers close to the root. Be careful, however, not to pinch the skin, nor to take hold of more than one hair at a time. Do not work too long on one part of the eyebrow, but remove a few hairs from the left and then go to the right eyebrow for a while. Some girls think that plucking these hairs affects one's eyesight, but there is no foundation for such a belief. Of course, if one's eyes are inflamed or sore, the slight pain due to the pulling out of eyebrow hairs may cause further irritation in that region.

After the plucking apply an anti-septic lotion. The hairs should, of course, be free from dirt, powder or paint before the operation is begun. To be beautiful eyebrows should not only be nicely shaped, but they must be glossy and sufficiently dark to give an accent. When the hair is light, the eyebrows should be about two shades darker. The nightly application of an oily substance like vaseline or olive oil will gradually tend to darken the hairs to a certain extent, but when they are extremely light some sort of eyebrow coloring may be used. Strong black tea may be used for the purpose. Mascara is sold for darkening eyebrows and eyelashes.

The eyebrows should be brushed daily with a small eyebrow brush in order to stimulate their growth, keep them well groomed and clean. The mascara must be removed at bedtime. Particles of dried soap or face powder should not be allowed to collect on the hairs. Dull, dark eyebrows may be made glossy by brushing with brilliantine after the make-up has been applied to the face. Thick, bristling eyebrows may be thinned out and then smoothed down with liquid vaseline.

Household Hints

Eggs

Break an egg into a funnel held over the dish. The white will pass through the funnel into the dish, and the yolk will remain in the funnel unless broken.

Smooth Custard

When soft custard curdles in making, set it in a pan of ice water, and whip with an egg-beater until smooth.

Embroidering

Try using two fine threads instead of one coarse thread when embroidering, and note the better effect.

Sugar beet growers and the Irish Sugar Manufacturing Company, at Carlow, Ireland, which receives a large subsidy from the Free State Government, had locked horns over the price of beets, and the growers have refused to deal with the company.

While Hawaii has a shortage of builders it has an oversupply of clerks this season.

Etiquette

By Roberta Lee

Q. How long do guests generally stay after an informal luncheon?

A. A half-hour, unless some special entertainment has been arranged for the afternoon.

Q. How should oranges be eaten at the table?

A. Oranges are peeled and then pulled apart, or at breakfast they may be cut into halves and eaten with the aid of the sharp-toothed orange spoon.

Q. When should a bride acknowledge wedding gifts?

A. Immediately. If this is not possible, a list should be kept and personal notes of thanks sent to all donors of gifts as soon as possible after the return from the wedding trip.
