FAMOUS FAKER DIED IN POVERTY

Louis De Rougemont, who died in a London poorhouse a short time ago, was the greatest faker of his time.

He was in 1898 that the name of Louis de Rougemont flashed before the world. He had just arrived in London from New Zealand and, after giving the newspaper editors a story of his thirty years' experiences in cannibal islands, he was engaged by the Wide World Magazine to give a full account of his adventures.

Vogue Foretells The Autumn Mode

Yes, Skirts are to be longer, 'tis the inevitable law of gravity, what goes up must come down, says Vogue—but the choice of several silhouettes is offered—Flower crowned coiffures, which was a Civil War fashion, are to be revisited, and long earrings swing from every knowing ear—Belts and girdles, especially in metal, will be very popular.

There is one clothes question that is at the moment uppermost in the minds of nine women out of ten. "Are skirts really going to be longer?—and if so, how much longer?"

Not in years has a fashion verdict been awaited with so much interest. The short skirt has been so popular so comfortable, and, to quite a woman, so becoming, that quite naturally there is a reluctance to part with it and a horrible vision of trailing lengths that sweep the dust.

But it isn't so bad as all that—in fact, it isn't had any way you would expect it. Longer, translated, means eight inches off the ground for street clothes—not much chance for dust sweeping there—and two to four inches for the evening.

This change may seem sudden to some women, but like all of fashion's marvels, today it really is quite logical, and truth to tell quite gradual.

Vogue announced definitely as late as September 1920, that skirts were growing longer, and has reported steadily ever since just how the all-powerful French dress-makers were conspiring to accomplish this end with no abrupt shock to their customers.

Every one remembers quite plainly the floating wisps of crepe de Chine or chiffon which first became the fashion in the spring of 1920. Little did women know, when they accepted this vagary of fashion, just how much they were letting themselves in for. It is true that they noticed that these wisps hung below the skirt proper, but then it was still a short skirt.

Then, somehow, there were more wisps—prettier things, and often they hung down farther than they had at first—but, of course the skirt was short. Then, all at once, panels which hung at either side joined the brigade of dress-makers explained quite convincingly, you couldn't expect to have wisps of cloth—and since you'd become accustomed to wisps, you just naturally had to have something to wear them on.

So why not panels? As the seasons advanced, these panels grew more definitely in character, and the eye saw them and lost sight of the once important skirt underneath until, last year's straight line short skirt looks decidedly out of style, and the long skirt has very definitely arrived.

Next in importance to skirt lengths comes the question of silhouettes. Time was when one said "the silhouette" but those simple days when a single silhouette dominated the season's fashion have passed until today we have almost half a dozen from which to choose each vying its very definite part in the scheme of things.

First comes the suit which, due to Parisian enthusiasm, is perhaps more popular than in several seasons. This year, it is made, very likely, of kasha cloth or broad cloth, called back into favor. Its coat may either be straight and bell-shaped or with a slightly curved waist line and godets on the side but flat back and front. Its color is black, black combined with grey, very dark red, or the new Madeline blue. Its skirt is nine inches from the ground.

Vying with it in popularity is the coat dress, a real feature of the coming season, with its high collar of fur, lowered waist line, defined by a gleaming steel belt and sometimes embroidered in cut steel beads. Its long sleeves, its fuller and longer skirt, its deep rich color further enriched by peasant embroidery.

Next comes the afternoon dress offered in several interesting silhouettes, but best liked, perhaps in two. One is in the real peasant spirit, with its characteristically long, loose, bloused lines, straight wide sleeves, lowered waist line, a sash knotted about it, a full, but straight hanging skirt, uneven at hem, and with touches of embroidery.

Novelty Souvenirs Appropriate

The sartorial preparations for the dinner were very interesting. As carefully as chorus girls getting ready for the opening performance the baldies and near baldies welded safety razors and applied the commercial chemicals for hair removal so that they might pass close inspection without being trimmed in public. Jeers greeted a long-haired member of the orchestra as he asked for a comb and a brush to make himself ready for the bandstand room.

So many attended that an overflow dining room had to be opened. Novelty souvenirs in the shape of mustache brushes and special egg beaters labeled "hair oil mixers" the necks of the bottles of ginger ale and other thirst quenchers were draped with mourning bands and the labels depicted a bald head marked "Gone, but not forgotten." Charles A. Agard was elected 1921 president.

Bound to Do Some Good. We may scatter the seeds of courtesy and kindness around us with little expense. Some of them will inevitably fall on good ground, and grow up into benevolence in the minds of others; and all of them will bear fruit of happiness in the bosom whence they spring. Exchange.

Belts are more noticeable than they have been in some seasons. Glistening metal or gay, colored belts in the daytime, soft sashes in the afternoon, and everything from flowers to jewels at night.

Sleeves, too, demand attention always long for the street, sometimes narrow, sometimes wide, sometimes a slashed musketeer trim for afternoon, and sure to be colorful. Sometimes half is of one fabric, half of another, again, part is embroidered in color.

Thus we have a season which offers a variety of silhouettes to suit every type and every occasion and which introduces a longer skirt, but lengthened so subtly, so gracefully, and withal, in so wide a variety of fashions that one can but accept the verdict with thanks.

Madeleine and Madeleine proves the length to which fashion has gone in a season, it this coat dress of Polish inspiration. The color is dull green with self-tone embroidery; the skirt is short in front and long on the sides. Fur is used at the throat and wrists. It is a far cry from the little black rag of six months ago.
