THE OLD MAN.

Get in your nests, birds, in the windy weather. And get hot me with your ill-omened. I am too old to live beneath Fear's law. Hopes fever me no longer nor doubts freeze. Half I forget what makes the blackbird So loud in spring.

The earth grows old around me; planets wane. Aeris's green glamor is spread out in vain. The rose sends nets of fragrance from her tree. But in her web of beauty takes not me; Out of the road I never turn my feet. For search of moon-or-h or of meadow-sweet.

The sea sings loud for youth. I hear it moan. Counting its rocky ramparts stone by stone. And all the green-haired people of the wave. They do but make wild music over graves. The graves of broken ships and drowned men. And cities that the sea has taken again.

I hate the gulls and terns that dip and cry. About the white cliffs, along the sundering sea. Or I should hate, if hate had not passed by. Even as love has, and forgotten me. Time has outdistanced my slow feet—behold, I have outlived Death. I cannot die. I am too old.

MR. LYTTLETON.

"Tay Pay" Sketch of the New Colonial Secretary.

Mr. T. P. O'Connor, in his Mainly About People, says of Mr. Lyttleton, the new Colonial Secretary: Mr. Lyttleton is tall and thin, and walks with the enormously quick stride of the athlete in perfect condition. He has a dark complexion, dark hair, rather inclined to be curly, dark eyes; altogether is of the Celtic or Spanish rather than the Saxon type of man. He has, like all his brothers and cousins, an air of distinction, and of a certain unworldliness; he might be a muscular clergyman or a muscular barrister, as he is; in any case, there is about him a certain look of elevation and abstraction, such as one would expect in a man who had either a very devotional or a very poetic nature. In any case, his face is that of a man with a fine mind and a sweet nature, and it is no wonder that he is, for that reason, a universally popular man. Probably one of the main reasons why Mr. Balfour selected Mr. Lyttleton as his colleague was a certain forlornness in his own position, and the tendency that such forlornness is calculated to create. If a Minister finds that he is at last thrown back on himself, he must seek his support, and his comradeship in men whom he can trust not merely as political associates, but as warm personal friends. Now it is said constantly of Mr. Balfour that, though he is a staunch and loyal political associate, and though he is a man to go to in an emergency, he is not a man of warm, ardent, or frequent affections. It has been stated that he really does not care for anybody much outside of a certain few, and there have been those who have said that outside of his own family, the one man Mr. Balfour has ever really cared for is Alfred Lyttleton. And, perhaps, that as much as his talents—which are far greater than have been represented—is why Mr. Lyttleton is Colonial Secretary.

New Zealand's Arbitration Act.

According to Public Opinion (New York), Mr. R. J. Seddon, Premier of New Zealand, writes a long letter to The London Times, in answer to various criticisms of the Arbitration Act in his colony. He sums up by declaring that since the act has been in operation there has been no attempt at strike or lockout that has not been instantly baffled and the dispute adjusted. The colony, he asserts, has enjoyed steadily increasing prosperity, as shown not only by rapidly increasing exports, but by the expansion of values of machinery, plants, output, etc., in manufactures, and the increased amount of wages paid, viz., £1,907,592 in 1895, as compared with £3,098,561 in 1900. Every trade in the colony, he says, is in full work, while the arrivals of immigrants from Australia, alone exceed by 10,000 for the year the number of departures. No better evidence of the good done by the Arbitration Act is needed, he thinks, than its imitation by neighboring states. He predicts that a similar law will be established soon in every Australian colony. All this is in very striking contrast with the contents of another letter from an Australian, who says that he recently questioned a number of workmen who were emigrating from New Zealand to Argentina, as to why they were leaving the country. They replied that it was because there was no chance of their rising out of the ruck of labor.

Duke Who Sent His Wife to Service.

A very notable Duke, who has estates in the three Kingdoms, and who holds almost princely sway over many workers, had occasion the other day to dismiss a laborer for some slackness or misdemeanor. The man was angry at being "sacked," and—having nothing further to fear or to hope—wanted to say something very hard and hurting to his master. He could think of nothing much of the kind, for the Duke had been good to him and to his. He was turning away, when he suddenly remembered that the Duke's "Lady" held a position at court with the Queen. That was his chance, and his cue, so he turned round on the Duke. "Oh, yes, your Grace," he said, "I'll go home. But though I'm a poor man, thank God I never had to send my missus out to service, as you had." The Duke smiled.—From M. A. P.

How We Divide Our Time.

An ingenious statistician finds that an average man of 50 years of age has slept 6,000 days, worked 6,500 days, walked 800 days, amused himself 4,000 days, has been eating 1,500 days, and has been ill 500 days. In this time he has eaten 70,000 pounds of bread, 16,000 pounds of meat, 4,000 pounds of vegetables, eggs, and fish, and drunk 7,000 gallons of liquid.
