

Religion And Life

January the first, 1950, began the last year of a half century; the prayer of mankind is that it may mark the repentance of the nations for the crimes of the last half-century, and the dawn of a new era in the dealings of man with man. It is its bearing on individuals as well as nations. New Year's is always a time for making resolutions. Human life is so complex and so imperfect in spite of the most earnest efforts at amendment that we are deeply dissatisfied with our record in the past and resolve to do better in the future. But, after all, are not the resolutions usually superficial dealing with symptoms instead of getting at the root of the trouble? We resolve to cut out this habit which has proved hurtful, or adopt that new attitude or course of action which promises better things. And all the while the real malady is deep-seated, rooted in our human nature.

What about the old enemies which have crept into our lives? Most of them sprang from trivial occasions, but one difficulty led to another, personal bitterness was engendered and there are people around us whom we cannot meet without embarrassment. Why let it go on? Christianity means reconciliation, and peace with God should carry with it peace with men. You may think that the other party is wholly to blame, and that he must make amends before there can be forgiveness. Christ's method was the opposite. "If your brother sins against you, go and tell him his fault between you and him alone." (Matthew 18:15) When you do that honestly you are likely to get a cordial response; the other fellow has been as deeply hurt as you are, and will welcome the healing of an old sore. But if you should find that there is another side to the story, make the wrong right and begin the year in peace.

The coming of Jesus, which the whole world has been celebrating for the last few weeks, marked humanity's new beginning. The gospel all is a summons to break away from an evil past and start life anew. The Gospel message is an announcement of what Christ has done for the whole world, once for all, to make humanity's new beginning possible, and of what He stands ready to do in the soul of each individual to make your transformation actual. The wrong we have done has put us in the wrong before God, and this means that we are soon in the wrong with men. Christ's aim is to free us from everything wrong in our past, and to reconcile us with God and man. His new beginning which is to turn our lives in a new direction must begin with Him.

Back of all this there is Christ's belief in the limitless possibilities of human nature. If you have been living on the plane of selfish aims and sensual enjoyment, there are in your nature depths that have never been released, and capacities for thought and devotion that have never been developed. Luke tells us of Zaccheus, a tax-gatherer, who was regarded by his fellow-countrymen as a traitor to his race and religion, but whom Jesus called "a son of Abraham." (Luke 19:9) Now this man had been untrue to all that Abraham stood for, but still in his heart of hearts he believed that Abraham's faith and way of life were the only good thing living for, and Christ treated that unrealized goodness as the real man after all. By so doing He brought out qualities that even Abraham in his greatness of faith and fidelity never surpassed. Just lately I have met many who were once self-centered and therefore the creatures of circumstances but who in answer to Christ's call are becoming servants of the eternal and benefactors of their race. There are possibilities of this sort in every one of us; why not give Christ a chance to bring them out? This is the new beginning to which He is calling us at this New Year.

very true words. A person can always find time, if he tries, for the things he likes to do. You know, you've often seen it yourself, where someone is intending to do some work or another whenever he can get around to it — it may be to fix a fence, or shingle a building, or perhaps just to put a bit of a sill under one that is sagging. And as you've noticed, he took years to get it done — if at all. But if he had put an hour or two a day towards doing it, as we are with the cutting in the stump-field, it is remarkable what he might have accomplished in time. It's just the same about finding time for some hobby or art or craft one wishes to enjoy or learn. No, Ellen, to my mind this having no time is a poor excuse for not getting something worthwhile done. "Take care of the minutes" poor old Mr. — used to say "and the hours will give you a good return" and they're very true words."

"But I can't seem to find time to get to town long enough to have my hair done!" we chuckled. "That, Ellen," James said with dignity "is not along this line of thought at all. That is another — and a very fickle consideration!" Rain on the roof and a warm South wind blowing — and December spinning last designs in the web of the old year.

Until tomorrow — Diary — Good-night
