ISSUE FOR CONSCRIPTION

(Continued from page two.) burned him in every all over the province. You had a bonfire every night. Let me read to you:

When the ministers understood their Confederation they had only in view the English colonies. The basis of all their calculation, of all their hopes, of all their projects, was always the English colonies.

That is what gentlemen of your party said 50 years ago. "Well, that is not the way we politicians of the Papineau school look at the matter." You know who Papineau was?

Look at the matter; when any change whatsoever is proposed in our political or social institutions, we do not look to see whether this change will be of use to the French colonies or to any other neighbor; we think only of Lower Canada and the French race.

That is all they think of today. Dandurand said so - said they had not moved for 150 years; said they were exactly where they were 150 years ago. That is a terrible reflection and criticism upon the French-Canadian race - upon their system of education. Intelligent people like the French-Canadians should have progressed in this splendid march of Confederation. That is a terrible reflection, for a man to stand up and dare to insult the race to which he belongs by mentioning it. If it were true, he should blush at the very fact I do not believe it is true.

What have we in common with the English colonies? What interests? What interests, what relations bind us to them? Is it a matter of origin, religion, language, national aspirations? No, not at all. We have nothing in common with the English colonies except we are dependent upon the same metropolis.

We will stop the river St. Lawrence when it reaches Quebec; we won't allow railroads to go through; we won't allow steamboats to go through; we will tax the whole business, and we will become the Chinamen of Canada.

We do not care a fig for the English colonies, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland. We have the same relations with them as with Australia. We are colonies of England, that's all. The only difference is the distance, greater or less, which separates us.

The article ends:

You have succeeded, gentlemen -

He says when Confederation is completed: You have succeeded, gentlemen; you have obtained a temporary triumph, but you have killed nationality.

What nationality? We thought we were creating a broad Canadian nationality. We did not know and did not realize - and today, honorable gentlemen, we refuse to recognize - anything but the broadest application of the words "Canadian nationality." We recognize no special pleaders, be they political, social, civil, or religious. We stand here today, honorable gentlemen, as representing broad views, broad tolerations for all the people, and no other views whatever.

One word more as to this quotation:

Will the people at last understand that the Canadian ministry are the valets and slaves of the Colonial Office?

Now, the only value of the quotations, the only application they have today, is that they are quotations from publications under the hand and seal of Sir Wilfrid Laurier when he was a lawyer in Arthabaskaville. The Papineau school. The Nationalist school. Do not try to fool people. If you French Canadians from Quebec desire to come into this Parliament and raise your voice and claim that you have a right to some supreme position away and beyond anything that the constitution or the treaties gave you, say so, but don't attempt for one moment to mislead us.

Something was said today by the honorable Director of the Canadian Pacific Railroad to the effect that the French Canadians are sensitive, but they are not the only sensitive people. We may be a little bolder, but there is still a heart in the English-speaking man as well as in the Frenchman. As a minority in our province we are entitled to some respect as well as the majority.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN: You get it, too.

Hon. Mr. POPE: No, we get nothing. Now, you all laugh, but you must not laugh, because you are wrong, absolutely wrong.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN: We -

Hon. Mr. POPE: Wait a minute; you always want things so damn quick. Just wait a minute. I say that the French-speaking people of our province, so far as the part from which I come is concerned, have received every justice, so far as I know, and I know much about that part of the country, because I formerly took a leading interest in that section politically. But we gave to them everything that was due to them, and more.

Hon. Mr. TESSIER: So did we.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Better than money to the French Canadians. A large percentage of the taxes comes from the English-speaking people, who are in the minority, yet they came into the parish after the independence of the United States, travelling hundreds of miles through the woods to plant there the little Union Jack that it might be permanent on the northern half of this continent.

Therefore we have deep feelings and are sensitive on that question. Although the majority of the taxes are paid by the English, they are represented by only three out of ten in the city council, the other seven being French Canadians. A resolution was recently moved in the council opposing conscription, and it was passed over the heads of the three English members; the other seven had not even the common decency to respect the sympathies of those people.

The honorable gentlemen used the word sensitive; do you think we have no nerves? Do you realize for one second that the British Empire owns this Canada of ours as part of it? Do you realize that this flag is floating over us because we kept it there, and not because they kept it there? Do you realize that in the old days, they settled the boundary lines under arbitrations, and if it had not been for the power of old England the Stars and Stripes would have been at Hudson's Bay instead of this flag, as it is now. You French Canadians have flourished under it, have had fair play under it, and special privileges that the French Catholic race enjoys nowhere in the world except in the province of Quebec? You are never trampled upon, never interfered with; you are treated as sacred as the Bible under the old Union Jack that floats over us. Do you realize that? And then you state, "For all that, we will lead the way in this great fight - by staying at home; we will show our appreciation of old England for what she has done - by staying right at home." True, there are some loyal hearts; you cannot so inoculate a whole nation or a whole province that there will not be in it some stout hearts, and you find them today, in the 22nd Regiment at the front fighting in the name of Quebec - fighting alone in the name of Quebec, when they should have 40,000 or 80,000 fighting.

The war has not been a fortunate thing for the great leader of the Liberal party, Sir Wilfrid Laurier. He has not been comfortable in time of war. The first opportunity he had of telling us exactly how he felt in time of war was at the time of the Riel rebellion, when he said that if he had been on the banks of the Red River he would have shouldered his musket and joined the rebels in shooting down the red-coats of Canada. That was not a fortunate attitude, but it is consistent with everything else that has gone along. The beauty of Laurier is his consistency in his inconsistency; he never fails. At that time he said of our dear brother Riel:

What act of rebellion did he commit? Did he ever raise any other standard than the national flag? Did he ever proclaim any other authority than the sovereign authority of the Queen? No, never. His whole crime and the crime of his friends was that they wanted to be treated like British subjects.

Riel was openly in arms at this time against the Governor General of Canada. He was a rebel. He was caught. He was pardoned, and I do not think he should have been pardoned. However, there was a question of doubt as to one form of government being proclaimed or placed in alternation before the other, and we, as true men of the Empire, to which we belong, gave him the benefit of the doubt and pardoned him. But he came back again for the second Riel rebellion, and it was then that Sir Wilfrid Laurier said he would have shouldered his musket.

We next found ourselves face to face with the South African difficulty, when Sir Wilfrid was again called upon to take into consideration the Empire or the war. A resolution was unanimously passed in the House of Commons on 31st of July, 1899, as follows:

1. Resolved, that this House has viewed with regret the complications which have arisen in Transvaal Republic, of which Her Majesty is sovereign, from the refusal to accord to Her Majesty's subjects now settled in that region any adequate participation in its government.

2. Resolved, that this House has learned with still greater regret that the conditions of affairs there existing has resulted in intolerable oppression, and has produced great and dangerous excitement among several classes of Her Majesty's subjects in Her Majesty's South African possessions.

3. Resolved, that this House, representing a people which has largely succeeded by the adoption of the principle of conceding equal political rights to every portion of her population, in harmonizing estrangements and in producing general content with the existing system of government desires to express its sympathy with the efforts of Her Majesty's Imperial authorities to obtain for the subjects of Her Majesty who have taken up their abode in the Transvaal, such measure of justice and political recognition as may be found necessary to secure them in the full possession of equal rights and liberties.

Then the war took place. We wanted to go; we said we must go, but what did he do? He said: As I understand the Militia Act - and I may say that I have given it some study of late - our volunteers are enrolled to be used in the defence of the Dominion. They are Canadian troops to be used to fight for Canada's defence. Perhaps the most widespread misapprehension is that they cannot be sent out of Canada. There is no menace to Canada, and although we may be willing to contribute troops, I do not see how we can do so. Then, again, how could we do so without Canada granting us the money? We simply could not do anything. In other words, we should have to summon Parliament.

What did we hear next? We next have this Order in Council: The Prime Minister, in view of the well-known desire of a great many Canadians who are ready to take service under such conditions (as prescribed by the Imperial Government), is of opinion that it would be thus involved for the equipment and transportation of such volunteers may readily be undertaken by the Government of Canada without summoning Parliament, especially as such an expenditure under such circumstances cannot be regarded as a departure from the well-known principles of constitutional government and colonial practice, nor construed as a precedent for future action.

All that took place in a few weeks - why? Because after his first utterance, that people could not go to defend this Empire in South Africa, the people of Canada awakened - to what? Awakened to the miserable stamp of cowardice and ingratitude that the then Premier of Canada proposed to place upon the loyal people of this country - with what result? That an agitation sprang up, and within a shorter time than this question has been discussed in the House of Commons and this House he was compelled to let those men go forward; but he branded them: "No precedent." We are sending 400,000 men now, and now one of them has a brand on him. They are going forward as the true expression of the loyal sentiment of Canadians. You can follow this matter through from start to finish, and on every page of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's history you will find that he has stepped forward and then backward upon all the great issues, but has never in all his lifetime proved himself to be a true friend of the upbuilding and permanency of the Empire to which we belong.

Hon. Mr. DAVID: Would the honorable senator allow me to ask a question? Does he ignore the fact that the candidate of that man Laurier, that rebel, was defeated in Drummond-Arthabasca, and that afterwards he was defeated in twenty contests in the election of 1911 by the Nationalists and the Conservative party? Was that because he was a traitor to Canada and also to England?

Hon. Mr. POPE: I am delighted with the speech the honorable gentleman has delivered; I thought he was going to ask a question. He is a great personal friend of the leader of the Opposition, and he has said that he was defeated on this and on that. What I said was that nowhere could you find a piece of Laurier's legislation that led this country and cemented it to the British Empire. Take his naval proposition: while the Parliament of Canada was going to control it, that Parliament, if he could manage it, was to be elected by every enemy of the British Empire. And thus he was going to hand over the defence of the Empire on the sea for he refused to allow our fleet to be part and parcel of the great fleet that defends the Empire. He refused to allow the Admiralty to dictate or ask how our ships should assist the great Imperial fleet of this Empire. It seems strange, but all the time his plan was one of separation. The whole object is to separate Canada, and the word separation has got to such a fever point in connection with this Bill that now he and his friends want to separate the province of Quebec from Canada. Separation is the whole proposition in every line you read. Let us read some more. Now I will give you some choice bits of Sir Wilfrid - something that nobody on the other side of the House will deny, and I expect to get tremendous applause:

Is there a Canadian anywhere who would not hail with joy the day when we would be deprived of the services of British diplomacy? I am ready any day to contradict that, whenever I am charged. Then he adds: I have again and again repeated that the goal of my aspiration is the independence of Canada. Grand applause! He holds out to his fellow-countrymen the idea of independence. He is loyal now; it must come with the consent of both countries, and we must keep the good-will and good feeling of other lands. He goes on:

It is manifest to me that the interests of my country are identical with the interests of the United States. Why don't you applaud? Hon. Mr. CLORAN: That is what they are now, isn't it? Hon. Mr. POPE: That is what we have made them. Hon. Mr. CLORAN: Answer that: are they not now with the United States? They are identical. Hon. Mr. DAVID: He did not say that. Hon. Mr. CLORAN: If he did not say it, are not your interests identical with the United States at the present moment? Answer that. Hon. Mr. POPE: Honorable gentlemen of the Senate, Hon. Mr. CLORAN: You got stung there. Hon. Mr. POPE: Honorable gentlemen of the Senate, I want to pay the compliment to my friend there

If we are true to our record, we will exhibit to the world the unique and unprecedented example of a nation achieving its independence by slow degrees, and as naturally as the severing of the ripe fruit from the parent tree.

Well, we are not gone yet; nobody has taken off the fruit, and if this Government has its way and we send a proper representation to the front no German will take off the fruit. Another bit:

The only tie that binds Canada and the mother country is the sentiment of affection. A day will necessarily come when they will have to part.

How sad! But they have not gone there yet. He continues:

I am a subject of the British crown, but whenever it comes to pass that as a Canadian I have to choose between the interests of England and the interests of Canada, my whole heart is with my native land.

There is the great Canadian speaking. But listen:

It is manifest to me that the interests of my country are identical with the interests of the United States.

Why don't you applaud? Hon. Mr. CLORAN: That is what they are now, isn't it?

Hon. Mr. POPE: That is what we have made them. Hon. Mr. CLORAN: Answer that: are they not now with the United States? They are identical.

Hon. Mr. DAVID: He did not say that. Hon. Mr. CLORAN: If he did not say it, are not your interests identical with the United States at the present moment? Answer that.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Honorable gentlemen of the Senate, Hon. Mr. CLORAN: You got stung there.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Honorable gentlemen of the Senate, I want to pay the compliment to my friend there
