Aubigny wore strictly a civilian air, but otherwise it was just the same. We made our way along the cobbled streets till we came to the station, where we were informed a new hotel was the resort of travellers. It was not very inviting, but the cheery young landlord, who had won the Maxville Militaire and other decorations in the French Army, had just started in business. He made us very welcome, and, showing us upstairs to the dining room, went off to prepare our meal. Through the window we got a good view of the green trees behind the town where the Officers' Club had been. We wished fervently it had been there now. The meal was a long time in preparing, but when it came we did full justice to the omelette, cheese and bitter black coffee. Our host was anxious to give every satisfaction. He got out five best spoons and dishes, and apologized for the shortcomings of the place, telling us that he had only just taken to hotel-keeping and that in the future we should find things more to our satisfaction. He had a good honest, merry face and we wished him all success in his new venture. He was again very hospitable. After a good smoke, sealing with satisfaction the poor Maurice was revived. We took our departure and set off in the direction of Villers Chatel, which had been on several occasions the home of our division. Aubigny has been little changed by the war and the road to Villers Chatel looked just as it did in the olden days. It was a pleasant surprise and green fields with the little village in the distance. The houses here are all old, though comfortably built, and are very picturesque. Before going on to the Chateau, we stopped at the little Church. This is a modern one though built in Gothic style. Near the Chancel on the left is the family pew of Count Adrien d'Esclabois who is the lord of the Manor. It is built like a little room and reminds me of some of the family pews in old churches in England. Many a quiet moment have I spent in that church, when the bustle and activity of the Chateau grounds made it a refuge and hermitage. It is clean and well-kept and the Countess looks after the flowers on the altar. We turned in at the Chateau gates, there was no sentry on guard, and drove up the neat road to the front door. The grounds looked very beautiful, the trees were luxuriant, and the building itself is much better kept than when we knew it. It is a fine modern house with, at one end, a large round stone tower, the only one remaining of four which stood there centuries ago. I went up the steps and rang the bell. A maid appeared and showed us into the drawing room, and then the Count and Countess entered and gave us a very hearty welcome. The Count, during our occupation of the place, had been away fighting in the French Army, but the Countess and her sister, who was now married, occupied one end of the building, while the other was used as billets for head-quarters. Many staff-officers have lived in that charming home and all of them cherish pleasant memories of the kind hospitality of our hostesses. We talked about old times, and I had to answer many questions about Canadian officers and their doings in times of peace. We went taken for a stroll through the grounds and saw the huge tree in the lawn under the green branches of which I used to hold Church-Parade on Sunday. The lower boughs have since been clipped and no longer touch the ground. We walked down the path where, for nearly a quarter of a mile, the interlaced boughs of three trees make a green vaulting overhead. It was always a favourite haunt of mine, and the gleam of sunlight at the opening in the far distance reminded me of the golden gate in Pilgrim's Progress. It was in a field on the other side of the wood that the great memorial service for those killed in Hill 70 was held by the 2nd Brigade when General Currie decorated the officers and men who had won honours in the battle.

We were taken to see the grove where the ladies used to put a number of lighted candles every night in front of the statue of the Virgin. The light from these was so conspicuous that our staff officers were always afraid that it would draw the enemy aeroplanes and give away our location. I remem-

Canada Does not Benefit

What is the matter with Canadian business today? We are asking through hard times. What is the reason for it? As I see it, the prosperity of Canada depends upon the prosperity of the producers of the natural products of the country—the products of the farm, the forest, the sea and the mine. Now the products of the farm, especially, are greatly reduced in price and why? Because the purchasing power of the customers of the producers of natural products has been reduced because Europe, having passed through the most awful war in history, is unable to purchase from us what she has been able to purchase in the past. Now, in order to help Europe to purchase from us we have to be prepared to purchase from Europe. International trade is affected all, not a question of selling goods for money as it is in private stores—it is a question of barter. Great Britain understood that almost a hundred years ago. She followed the axiom that those who wished to sell must be prepared to buy. Anything which helps to foster trade between Europe and this country is worthy of our support, and anything which does them harm has done or can do nothing that these lines should receive our strong approval. I do not think an occasion of this kind should pass without some word being spoken as to the soundness of the treaty as a whole. There may have to be some changes in the excise law to correct possible inequalities. In regard to some of our products, but that is not the question before the House today. I wish to express for what it is worth, my strong approval and to thank the ministers for what they have done for this country.

Mr. ANDERSON: I should like to ask the minister with regard to a few items in schedule A, dealing with the products of the farm, wheat, oats, barley, rye maize and buckwheat and their by-products. They are to receive the benefit of the minimum tariff. On looking up the tariff of France for 1921 I do not find there is any minimum tariff. There is only one tariff which is the maximum. I was wondering if the tariff had been changed.

Mr. FIELDING: There are some cases in our own tariff where the item is the same in both columns, and it is so in that case. The general minimum tariff came but whatever the minimum may be from time to time, we get the advantage.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Could the hon. gentleman tell me the difference between the duty under the old tariff on poultry, for example, and the new tariff? It is item No. 14 in schedule B, which used to be under the minimum tariff.

Mr. FIELDING: In the old treaty it was under the minimum tariff. It is now under the minimum tariff but is in the second schedule, where certain percentages are provided.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The minister does not give the figures and I am in a difficulty to know whether we are hurt and how much. The question was the duty under the old tariff on item 14. What is the duty today?

Mr. FIELDING: I could not off-hand give you that information but I will at a later stage.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Perhaps the hon. minister could give the information on all these agricultural items?

Mr. FIELDING: As far as possible, I will give the information.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Can the hon. minister tell us the duty on wheat going into France previously per bushel?

Mr. FIELDING: Seven francs per hundred kilograms.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Could the hon. minister get the information per bushel?

Mr. FIELDING: The franc is worth about six cents. That would make it 42 cents.

Mr. MEIGHEN: A bushel? Mr. FIELDING: The franc is worth about 6 or 6 1/2 cents and of course it varies from day to day. Those duties are paid in francs. It was pointed out with some truth that while the maximum tariff of France is the high tariff when you pay it in the depreciated currency it works out to a low rate.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And that would be 42 cents for how much? Mr. FIELDING: Two hundred and twenty francs.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Could the minister tell us what change was made in that item? What was the rate on wheat before the treaty?

Mr. FIELDING: I think there was no change in it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am pretty sure there was no change and there was no advantage obtained there. I think my hon. friend will agree with me that in the case of a number of items no change takes place at all. What about oats?

Mr. FIELDING: The same. If we get the minimum what more can we get?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am just pointing out that there are not these vast gains referred to by the hon. member for Brum (Mr. McMaster) for the producers from the soil. They are left where they are very largely.

Mr. FIELDING: Yes, with this difference; that the old treaties are at an end, and if we do not

The DUST FLOWER
A BASIL KING PRODUCTION
with HELENE CHADWICK, CLAUDE GILLINGWATER, and JAMES RENNIE
Directed by ROWLAND V. LEE
BASIL KING
The tenement girl whom he married in his hour of desperation. The society beauty who begged him to come back.
Basil King has written an absorbing story of human relations, the vivid drama of a pavement lily who blossoms in the luxury of love. It is a tender recital of romance. It is a rugged message of faith.

negotiate a new treaty we come under the old rates which are higher.
Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In some cases.
The CHAIRMAN: Shall the resolution carry?
Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. minister does not propose to carry the treaty in committee without taking it up item by item.
Mr. FIELDING: No, I will introduce the bill and it will come before the committee in due course.
Mr. MEIGHEN: I am not going to suggest holding up the resolution now, but when the bill is presented the treaty will be taken up clause by clause?
Mr. FIELDING: If anybody wishes it. It is the schedule to the bill.
Mr. MEIGHEN: It is the treaty which is important and not the bill.
Resolution reported, read a second time and concurred in. Mr. Fielding thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 23 respecting a certain Convention of Commerce between His Majesty and the President of the French Republic.
Motion agreed to and the bill read a first time.
Mr. FIELDING moved the second reading of the bill. He said: The bill will then go into committee.
Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think we had better follow the usual course. There is a lot of information which should be prepared.
Mr. FIELDING: Very well, next sitting of the House.
