Recent Jap Flanking Charge that Drove Kuropatkin out of Liao-Yang.

This illustration, made from sketches on the spot of the final charge of Kuroki's army, shows the desperate nature of the fighting on the north bank of the Taitse river, just before General Kuropatkin decided to abandon his carefully developed entrenchments around Liao-Yang. The Japanese, despite the fact that they had been marching and fighting for five consecutive days and as many sleepless nights, hurled themselves upon the Russian guard alongside the railway with such effect as to apprise the Russian commander in chief that his position was no longer tenable.

MIDWINTER.

The singing of birds is heard not, nor the whir of insect wings, nor the sound of waters, nor the swaying of branches flaunting a hey day verdure.

The note of the sparrow is but a mockery of the lusty matutinal chirping with which the "gamin of the air" was wont to herald the sunrise in days of song.

The wind moans sullen, no note of pity in its cadence, no tender caress in its touch; bitter, biting, remorseless it sweeps a dreary landscape in frigid gusts of rude inclemency.

The sky invites no introspect of "depths o blue," coldly repellent it seems, the clouds torpid, aimless, the stars the eeriest "tyrants in their iron skies innumerable, pitiless, passionless eyes, cold fires."

No gay prismatic coloring revels in dainty blade, or fluttering leaflet, or shapely corolla; silently nature trails her ghost-like garb in sombre ways.

The dark delicate tracery of dismantled branches looms up monumental of the passing of a summer pageant, prophetic of the awakening of a resurrection life.

The story is told of an artist who was seen in such apparent destitution in his studio that he was deemed a fitting object of charity, and what was needful for the improvement of his cheerless environment was provided him. What was his friends' dismay on their next visit to find the same discomfort prevailing, an empty stove more rusty than before, a bare floor on which lay heaps of snow, unmelted. The artist was inuring himself to the rigors of the "open" that he might depict a winter twilight with its hazy blending of earth and sky, its sombre ashen coloring, the mellowed indistinctness of its outlines, the subtility of its frozen fascination.

A keen observer of the ways of wood folk has described the fretful porcupine as never seeming to know where it is going or what it is going to do. That is exactly the sensation you experience when you find yourself in a snowbank on a level with your chin. You plunge and flounder and gasp for breath and wonder whether there isn't a chance of your sinking two feet deeper, and how long it will be before your head goes under. And then you get chilly, and your memory conjures up the exact number of ugly valentines you have sent in your life. You see them all in a row, just as they are displayed in the shop windows, all horribly magnified and grinning hideously in wicked triumph at your sorry plight. Their ugly faces become unbearable, you determine that you must get out of their way and gain courage from a glimpse of a man with a snow shovel a few yards off. It may be the only chance for your life; you resolve to propitiate him with a friendly "Good morning," and open your mouth in the endeavor, but a snowy gust sweeps the salutation clean over the nearest house, you can feel it going. Then with the resolution of despair you strike out boldly with both hands, and after repeated rebuffs and discouragements succeed in gaining an eminence which offers you a secure footing. And then you get your breath, and brush the snow out of your eyes, and forget all about your flounder in the snowy depths, and, beginning to feel amicable again, you ask the man with the snow shovel if the snow isn't just glorious, and he scowls first at the seven foot bank in front of him and then at you and mutters something about South Carolina.

And down the hill the children go coasting, shouting gaily, laughing merrily, brimful of joyous spirits and a glorious vitality, their faces radiant with the pulsing of a quickened life, their eyes aflame with gleam of childish glee, their voices fresh and mellowed in the frosty winter air.

Children Are Underfed.

THE RESULT IS WEAKNESS, RICKETS, ST. VITUS' DANCE AND MANY ILLS OF CHILDHOOD. THE CURE IS

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

"Nine-tenths of children are underfed," writes a great English scientist who made an exhaustive study of the subject.

Children require double nourishment—to enable them to grow as well as to repair the wear and tear consequent on living.

Active exercise of mind and body, together with growth and physiological changes, consume nerve force at a tremendous rate, exhaust the supply of rich blood and leave the body weak and liable to disease.

Pallor and weakness, weak eyes, nervousness, skin diseases, rickets, St. Vitus' dance and constant liability to catch cold and to contract the disease of childhood are the result.

As a means of restoring the vitality of weak, puny children there is no preparation so effective as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Being mild and gentle in action and powerful as a creator of new, rich blood and nerve force, this great food cure is admirably suited to the needs of childhood, soon adds new, firm flesh and tissue to the weak and emaciated body and restores the vigor of robust childhood.

There is no means by which nourishment is so directly supplied to the blood and nerves as by the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, because this preparation is composed entirely of the elements of nature which are required to build up and restore strength to the system.

Mrs. John Boutilier, 163 Morris St., Halifax, N. S., states: "One of my children was all run down in health. She was going to school and I suppose the close confinement was responsible for her trouble. At times she had a very severe headache and she became very weak and nervous. I got her a box of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and I now wish to state that the results of this treatment have been all that we could wish. Her nerves were steadied, the headaches have gone and her general health is excellent. I have used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills myself and consider them a splendid medicine."

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, at all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. The portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author are on every box.

WHY YOU SHOULD USE

Red Rose Tea

Because it is accepted as a standard of quality.

Red Rose Tea can be found in the sample room of nearly every tea firm in Canada. It is used as a standard of quality by which they judge their own teas.

A large London, Eng. Tea firm recently asked their correspondents in Montreal to send them samples of the best brand of tea sold in this country—they sent Red Rose.

This is a very high tribute to Red Rose Tea. If you will try the tea you will feel like endorsing this tribute.

Loose no time, but bring all your extra goods either wearing apparel or otherwise, lace curtains, or any other kind, silks, &c., ties, gloves, opera cloak, &c., or any article but furs.
