CLOVER ENSILAGE

By J. H. Grisdale of Experimental Farm

OF ESPECIAL INTEREST

To P. E. Island Farmers Who Met The Promoter Last Fall.

Mr. J. H. Grisdale, Agriculturist, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, sends us the following account of experiments conducted with clover ensilage:

In August, 1900, a small stave silo, 9 feet in diameter and 22 feet high, was erected. The material was 2 inch spruce. A roof was built over the silo, but no other protection was provided for the ensilage than that afforded by the 2-inch stuff of the staves.

During the first and second weeks in September this silo was filled with the aftermath from a clover meadow. This consisted for the most part (about 75 per cent.) of clover, with a small admixture of timothy or herd grass. The clover was in full bloom, with here and there a head turning brown. The timothy was nearly ready to shoot the head.

The crop was cut in early morning, the mower being at work at six o'clock. The wet material was gathered at once, loaded and hauled to the silo into which it was thrown and tramped as firmly as possible. The silo was filled to the top three times, but when opened in January, 1901, the contents had sunk 10 feet from the top. The surface was dry, and the material for a depth of from 12 to 15 inches was of very little value, save as manure. Below the depth, however, the contents were in a good state of preservation, the leaves semi-transparent and the clover heads looking as though having been cut some two or three days only. The odor was very pleasant, the ensilage having retained the peculiarly sweet smell of new cut clover, with a very slight apparent acidity. There was no apparent effect from frost, the ensilage was frozen only slightly from the wall. The ensilage was eaten with avidity by cattle, sheep and pigs.

After being exposed to the air for some time, however, a rather unpleasant odor developed. This objectionable feature would, I think, be obviated if the ensilage were fed regularly in sufficiently large quantities as to protect the surface from too long exposure to the air.

Were the surface weighted after the last filling, the loss at the top would, I think, be reduced to an inconsiderable amount.

The use of silos to conserve clover for summer feeding is, I think, rather strongly indicated by this work.

Clover cut in June, when in full bloom could be fed out in palatable form during July and August, and the silo be ready for corn and clover in September. It would, however, be inadvisable to try this work with a large silo unless a very large herd of cattle were being fed.

"Nerves," easily irritated, over-sensitive, so that any sudden noise or any repeated fidgety sound tortures; shaky hands or limbs; headache; sometimes neuralgia; temper variable; easily depressed; often wakeful at night, and tired on arising in the morning. These things also result from the hurried, nerve exhausting condition of present day life. A healthy man or woman does not worry. The cure is to remove the cause. The cause is nervous exhaustion—the cure is to tone up the nerves.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are an immediate, unmistakable nerve food and nerve tonic. They healthfully stimulate the nerves and keep them stimulated. They cure the worried, jaded mind and temper through the nerves; give strength to the weak and aching back; fill tired, dejected, overworked men and women with cheerfulness, new ambition, and serviceable, work-producing energy. The first box proves it, but the first and every box must look just like this— or you will get one of the "something elses" that some dealers sell people whom they think it safe to impose upon. "Something else" never cured anyone; Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have cured thousands—some of them your neighbors, who won't mind telling you so if you ask them.

PROOF OF CURE.

Mr. Ambrose Major, Williamstown, Ont., says:—"Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have restored me to health after suffering for months from extreme nervousness. The least sound would startle me; I was subject to headaches and easily irritated. My constitution was naturally strong and I at first ignored the trouble, thinking I would soon be all right. This was a mistake, for instead of getting better, I became worse and had to take to my bed. Only those who have been afflicted with nervous troubles can tell how much suffering they cause, and my condition was almost indescribable. I was attended for some time by a doctor, but found no improvement. Then a friend suggested Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I got a few boxes. After I had used the second box there was much improvement in my condition, and by the time I had used a half dozen boxes I was again enjoying good health. I naturally think no other medicine can equal Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for nerve troubles.

If your dealer does not keep Dr. Williams' Pink Pills they will be sent by mail post paid, at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by addressing the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.
