Deadline Lady

By Georgia Craig

The "unknown white man, aged about sixty," was laid decently to rest in a neat dark casket covered with flowers sent by people touched with Anne's story on his plight, in the churchyard of a rural church just outside of town. The funeral was well attended and there was a "follow-up" story the next day.

People of the paper became aware of Ann and assured her she'd done a good job. She was flushed and pleased about it, and smiling pugnaciously when she laid a story on Tracy's desk or evening a few days later.

He ran over it swiftly, while she waited, thrust it at the copy boy, and stood up.

"Pick up your hat and coat," he said carelessly, "and I'll buy you a dinner."

Ann stared at him, openmouthed.

"I'll buy me a dinner," she gasped and looked uncontrollably "Why?"

Tracy grimaced that boyish, almost endearing grin that did such credit to his age and his ordinary good sense.

"Well even a city editor must occasionally eat sometimes besides reporters," he admitted, "and gal newspapermen have to eat, too. So is there anything wrong in their eating together?"

"Ann's eyes were frankly suspicious. 'No arsenic in my soup?' she demanded.

"We'll, maybe just a drop or two — but not a lethal dose," he assured her cautiously. And as she still looked at him, he said rather briskly "Here get on with it before that telephone yells at me and I get tied up for an hour—I'm starving!"

"It was absurd, of course, but she admitted to herself as she went up to get her hat and coat, to wash her hands and powder her pretty nose, she was a little excited about having a dinner with him."

Tracy came to meet Ann, his hand cupping her elbow, turning her about, marching her out of the room and towards the elevator, even as she asked "Ready?"

"If I were not, would it matter?" Ann asked lightly, and laughed a little as he all but lifted her into the elevator. "Are you always so so impetuous?"

Tracy scowled down at her and said sternly, "Don't you flirt with me, Clayton—I'm out of practice!"

Ann colored but laughed. The elevator descended slowly to the main floor, and there as they stepped out they faced a big half-moon of a desk, above which hung a sign that read "Classified Advertising Department." Back of this half-moon half a dozen girls were dawdling. One, a really luscious blonde, was doing nothing except examine her long, racy-lined nails with a sort of absent admiration.

Tracy said quietly, "Over here a minute."

The luscious blonde beamed at Tracy.

"Hiya, Chick?" Tracy smiled warmly and said "Hiya, Chick?"

Then to Ann he said, his tone formal and jolly, "Miss Clayton, Miss Marven—you two should know each other."

"Should we?" asked Ann pleasantly. "Why?"

"Because, said the blonde before Tracy could speak, you've got my job—one I could handle."

The two girls eyed each other. Tracy's hair was shining golden silk done up in an artful and very sophisticated sweep; her eyes were as blue as grape hyacinths in early spring; her skin was perfect and the figure, shown off to perfection by a powder blue cashmere sweater and a darker blue skirt, left nothing to be guessed at.

Ann drew a deep breath, carefully counted to ten and said sweetly, "Oh, well, we're both pretty new on our jobs, Miss Marven. But if I don't make good on mine, I'll trade with you."

"Miss Clayton," she said gently, and smiled up at Tracy and said warmly, "So I'll be upstairs with you I see."

"Thanks a lot for being so sure I can't make the grade, both of you," she said when she had finished counting to ten and could make herself smile again.

GALLANT-ARSENault

A wedding of interest to many was solemnized in St. James Church, Egmont Bay, on Wednesday, July 9th, when Mrs. Jacqueline Arsenault, widow of the late Andrew Arsenault became the bride of Emmanuel Gallant of Mt. Carmel.

Rev. Father Emmanuel Gallant, brother of the groom performed the ceremony and sang the Nuptial Mass.

The bride looked charming in a street-length dress of white satin with matching accessories. Miss Thelma Arsenault, the bridesmaid and wore a pale-pink dress with matching accessories, while Emmanuel Richards ably supported the bride.

After the ceremony, the wedding breakfast was served to a number of guests at the home of the bride's parents. Later in the day the happy couple motored to Tignish to see the bride's sister, who is a religious in the convent of Our Lady of the Angels, then returned to the groom's home where over two hundred guests participated in a sumptuous supper.

The bride and groom were the recipients of many beautiful and useful gifts which show the high esteem in which they are held by their many friends and relatives.

Before the wedding the bride was tendered a shower at her home where she received many beautiful gifts.

Mr. and Mrs. Gallant will reside in Mt. Carmel.
