CHRISTMAS TREE AND ENTERTAINMENT - On Wednesday night, Dec. 26th, the Sunday School of the Summerside Presbyterian Church held its annual Christmas treat. A very large audience of parents and friends showed its enthusiastic appreciation of the various songs and recitations rendered by the children. The excellence of these numbers reflected much credit on those who were responsible for the programme. Santa Claus did not fail to put in his appearance and distributed gifts to all the young people present. An interesting feature of the evening was a presentation to Mr. and Mrs. S. M. Hicks, who quite recently celebrated their golden wedding anniversary. Mr. Hicks has been connected with the school as Secretary-Treasurer for the long period of 48 years, performing his many duties with diligence and unflinching good nature. All present voted the evening a great success. Much credit is due to all the committees which worked so well, and faithfully.

FUNERAL OF MRS. E. H. STRONG - The remains of Mrs. Ernest H. Strong, of Summerside, who died recently whilst on a visit to her sister in Schenectady, N. Y., arrived here on Tuesday night. They were met at the train by Mayor Arnett and the beloved husband's fellow members of the Summerside Town Council and conveyed to her late home on Myrtle Street. From thence the funeral took place on Thursday morning to St. Paul's Church, which was filled with citizens of all denominations gathered to pay their last respects. The services were conducted by Rev. J. D. MacDonald and Rev. Urban Gillis, the latter officiating at the grave. The pall bearers were Messrs. L. M. MacNeill, J. J. Morris, F. J. E. Wright, Victor Traverse, Roy Sillit, and A. A. Large. The floral tributes which were profuse and very beautiful, included wreaths from the Town of Summerside, Officers of 1st Battalion P.E.I. Highlanders, Members of the Bar at Summerside, Mr. A. E. MacLean, M. C., and Mrs. MacLean, Premier A. C. and Mrs. Saunders.

The Markets

(Canadian Press)

MONTREAL, Que., Dec. 28. - Trading in cash grain in the Montreal market today was again of a limited character. The tone of the market was steady and prices showed no change. The spring and winter wheat flour markets were likewise dull with prices steady. The holiday slowness had likewise affected the milled trade. The weather was said by dealers to be unfavorable to heavy demand for the various lines. Prices were steady. There was a fair demand for rolled oats at unchanged prices. Fresh eggs from Ontario freely at the present time, the movement being three weeks ahead of previous years due most likely to the continued mild weather. There were no price changes today. Receipts were 1,296 cases. The potato market took on strength and P. E. I. potatoes were sold at higher prices with the whites at 84 cents and the green mountains at 90c per 90 lb. bag. The bean trade was quiet and steady. Butter receipts were 127 packages. A stronger feeling developed in the market for the week ending an advance of 1-4 to 1-2 cent per lb. The market was more active than it had been for several days. The cheese situation showed no change with prices stationary and the volume of business small.

OTTAWA, Ont., Dec. 28. (Eggs) - There is no change of any importance being reported from Canadian egg markets today. The situation continues easy under continued production.

Wheat - The local egg market is unchanged. Dealers are quoting country shippers for ungraded eggs delivered cases returned extras 48 to 50 cents, first 38 to 40, pullet extras 35 to 36. The turkey market is easy with supplies ample to meet requirements. Other varieties of poultry are steady.

Montreal - The egg market here continued dull under accumulation of stocks. Present weather conditions are greatly against the sales of both poultry and eggs.

Vancouver - The local egg market continues easy but the majority of dealers are still holding to previous price quotations.

St. John - This egg market is dull with prices continuing easier. The mild weather is favoring heavy production. Chicago spot unchanged, Dec. 28-1-8, Jan. 25-1-2.

PARIS, December 28 - Is there somewhere in London a house of mystery stocked with some of the deadliest germs known to science, ready to be employed in response to the will of some ghastly enemy of society?

This alarming question is raised by M. Jean Chiappe, Prefect of Police in Paris, following one of the most sensational discoveries ever made by the authorities in a raid on a quiet villa at Nogent-sur-Marne.

In a secret room of a house tenanted by a man named Schirmer the police found a number of test tubes containing supplies of such germs as those of cholera, leprosy and consumption.

The police are satisfied that these had been prepared for some sinister purpose, and although the charge on which Schirmer has been arrested is one of fraud, the police claim that they have in their hands a criminal of monstrous type, hitherto unknown outside the pages of fiction.

It is alleged that he has in his possession sufficient germs to inoculate thousands with these terrible scourges, and spread through the world an epidemic worse than anything known to history.

Schirmer is thought to be the head of an international gang of dope peddlers, and the police are positive, from the papers in their hands, that he has been sending supplies of germs to London for some time past.

Enthronements at Canterbury

(From The London Spectator)

The Dean and Chapter of Canterbury have recently enthroned the Primate they elected in his Cathedral Church of Christ in Canterbury, of all other storied cities, when ever a page of history is turned, the crowded pages of the past flutter in the wind of memory and one catches a glimpse of the blue and gold of their illumination.

The archbishops, priors, and monks of the Middle Ages knew incomparably well how to create the atmosphere of expectancy culminating in gorgeous ceremonial. The proceedings, inevitably, were long drawn out. Where two days of telephone and railroad suffice us today for the preliminaries, in bygone centuries they occupied perhaps a month. Thus Archbishop Stafford was laid to rest on May 30th, 1452, in front of the new chapel of the Blessed Virgin. The same day two brethren of the house set out on horseback to ask license of the King to choose Stafford's successor; they were John Wolton, a bachelor of theology, and Walter Herford, Custodian of the Manor and Farm Steward. On June 28th, John Kempe, Cardinal Archbishop of York, was elected Primate in the Chapter House, where the arched walls and carved and gilded roof remain, a setting scarcely altered for the present proceedings. Next day, again, two messengers, Brother Richard Graveney, "Steward of the College of Oxford," and Walter the indefatigable, remounting to form the King and the Archbishop-elect of the Convent's choice. Kempe, also, was "intra-muros" while wintry shadows filled the Choir with mystery, on December 11th.

Picture now the Archbishop, long expected, riding up to the Cemetery Gate, that ancient archway, patterned by the Norman axe, which then separated the buying-places of monk and citizen, and stood in the middle of the Precincts. Through the gate files out the Convent procession, in white copes, chanting words of greeting, "Let your loins be girded." Within them are guests from neighbouring conventual houses, come to welcome the Lord Archbishop, the Abbots of St. Augustine's and of Faversham, of Langdon and St. Radegund's, all within a day's journey.

In the Archbishop's retinue are Peers of the Realm; Lord Cobham and Lord Stafford accompanied Archbishop Stafford, and with Cardinal Kempe rode Tiptoft, Earl of Worcester, the Lord de L'Isle, the Prior of St. John in London, and St. John Tyrell.

As the Archbishop falls to the Company; the Prior of Christchurch, Master of the Ceremonies, receives from a cleric of the archiepiscopal household the pallium, folded in a white cloth, unfolds and passes it back to the Chaplain. He lifts high in his hands the precious token of papal benediction, laid in a silver dish under a white silk veil, and followed by the whole procession bears it into the church to rest on the high altar.

The monks are by now in their seats in the Choir, singing a Latin Te Deum; the Archbishop occupies a gilded wooden chair that magnificence of service. The Royal guests lodged at St. Augustine's Abbey, came thence in procession to the Cathedral, feasting the citizens' eyes with their splendor, and took a stand near St. Augustine's Chair. The marble seat was placed at that time - indeed until the eighteenth century - at the summit of the eastward steps, the high altar being on a lower platform. The Archbishop, vested in full pontificals, wearing the pallium, now entered the Choir, attended by the Prior, three deacons and three Cardinals, who, kneeling amid the singing of the Vespers, ren stationed himself under the Shrine of St. Blasius, behind the high altar, facing east, towards the Chair and Becket's Shrine, jeweled becketed. At this - crowning moment, the Prior, the ancient collect "Almighty and Eternal God" upon his lips, led the Archbishop to the marble chair, lifted him reverently into it, and from a scroll which he held, read the solemn words. By His authority, I, Henry, Prior of this Church of Christ in Canterbury, enthrone of Christ in Robert, Archbishop in this church of Canterbury, into which may the same Our Lord Jesus Christ guard thy coming, now and for ever more. Amen. A notary public was called up to make a formal record of his words, for the information of posterity.

Eight monks now came forward before St. Blasius's Shrine, chanting the Benedictus in alternate cadence, while the Archbishop still sat on his throne. The scene was one of extraordinary brilliance. Under the rule of Prior Henry of Eastwy, the Convent had reached its highest point of prosperity. Its presses were stored with magnificent vestments, copes of red samite, bordered with golden tassels, copes embroidered in scriptural scenes and sewn with pearls, chasubles of green or crimson silk; Lanfranc's cope, still in use, was heavily jewelled; at its hem tinkled fifty-one bells of silver gilt, a great topaz and four amethysts glinted on the breastplate. In the treasury chests were pearl-trimmed mitres, crosses and stars, set with many coloured stones, rich in turquoise or chalcid.

At the last feast before the monks were driven from their cloister, Edward, Duke of Buckingham, was Archbishop Warham's Seneschal, bareheaded, on horseback, holding a white wand of office, he stood on guard before His Grace, supported by the Herald-at arms and the Sewer, while the dishes were served every dish in its order. The food was not perhaps so satiating as the number of dishes might suggest, but the lamb and roast conger, dolphin fritters and purple and orange torts are less "flaming" than roast beef, and no meat was served. But what can be said of the "Warners", that strange series of pictures made of flower-petals, carried round before the feast began? Each was arranged in "panes" upon a board, and designed, with appropriate mottoes, to convey the superlative quality of the latest successor of St. Thomas; "in the face of the Warners" the Archbishop Ghost appeared with bright beams proceeding from him, of the gifts of grace towards the Lord of the Feast.

Between the courses "subtleties" were displayed, made of sugar and wax, appropriate to the guests. The monks subtly represented the Corporation had "a town well garnished with the Mayor and his Brethren"; the Barns of the Cinque Ports, a great ship.

Five hundred plates and dishes in pewter were piled for the occasion; the cooks and their outfit of pots and pans came down from London; the wines, the wheaten conger and lampreys, the oil, the fees of mimes and heralds, stood Warham in some $5,000. With such a bonfire the enthronement feasts of the Middle Ages flared out into ashes.
