WE ARE SERIOUS
 Are Prepared to Meet Italy's Challenge in Mediterranean.

LONDON, June 10—(CP)—Throughout the Mediterranean tonight, the feet of Britain and France were prepared to meet the challenge of Italy's light but powerful navy for supremacy of the island.

The Allied fleets, augmented since the outbreak of war by secret but undoubtedly tremendous output of the world's best shipyards, had to relinquish no part of their grip on the North Sea and English Channel in making ready for Italy's action.

Tonight heavy units of the Royal Navy and the British fleet were operating in the North Sea and France while others kept up the ceaseless patrol of the channel that serves the dual purpose of presenting any invasion of England and of conveying British Tommies to their posts beside their French comrades in the battle of France.

The north the evacuation of Narvik by the North Sea was accompanied by some losses. The ancient but useful aircraft carrier Glorious was unharmed and now must be assumed to have been lost. Two destroyers, the Acasta and Ardent, were in her company and also are presumed to be lost as are also the transport Orama, and the tanker Pioneer. The Orama had no troops aboard.

The Glorious, of 22,500 tons, was which was torpedoed by a courageous Italian submarine on Sept. 17, 1939. She carried a normal complement of 1,216 men, including Royal Air Force pilots. The Ardent and Acasta were 1,350-ton ships with normal complements of 138 men each. The Pioneer was of 5,666 tons and the Orama 19,840 tons, was a liner in the Far East, before being converted into a troop carrier. Britain had seven aircraft carriers when war was declared, of which all but the Glorious and Courageous are still in service.

The Glorious was built during the last war as a cruiser with a shallow draft of 22-16 mean feet with a view to operations in the Bay.

When the war it was decided to convert her into an aircraft carrier and the work was completed in 1930.

The Glorious is in the light craft and submarines. She has four battleships, two of which were but recently launched and may not be fully commissioned.

The rest of her navy, as of last September, numbered seven heavy cruisers, 14 other cruisers, 61 destroyers, 104 submarines, 70 torpedo boats and 72 motor torpedo boats.

That type of navy meant that Italy's admirals would aim at a "hit and run" war. To meet the threat, the British and French have built and otherwise acquired hundreds of small fast craft suitable as submarine chasers.

Italy has no aircraft carriers. She has always believed in her bases on her mainland and on Sardinia, Sicily, Rhodes and in Italian Libya she can dominate the narrow waters of the Mediterranean without them.

 Father Maloney sat up sharply as though to protest at this, but apparently he thought better of it, for he said nothing.

Apparently the Major found the letter as puzzling as had his daughter, for after a moment he uttered a disgusted exclamation and started to read again from the beginning—out about this time.

"Anchor off the south-west sand-pit on account of the trades," he read. "Then head up over the sand-hills towards the middle of the island, where there's a few timbers from a ruined shack. Maybe you'll have to look for these because the loose sand is liable to bury them after a blow. Sixty yards north of the shack, in a patch of low scrub and tangled weeds, you'll find a small keedge anchor buried with one fluke just showing. It isn't easy to spot it among the weed, unless you know it's there, but you'll find it if you can't make out the anchor itself. It strikes me he must have made an idiotic mistake of some kind and put this into the envelope instead of some other one. Unless... I suppose there isn't anything else, is there?"

"No, nothing!" Diana said, displaying the empty envelope. "That's all."

"They looked at one another blankly for some moments, and it was Father Maloney who broke the silence."

"It conveys nothing to you at all?" he asked slowly, looking at Diana. "Not a thing!" she told him. "I can't imagine what it means!"

"Might I ask if it conveys anything to you?" the Major demanded, with heavy sarcasm.

The priest looked at him thoughtfully for a moment before replying. "Well, yes, it does," he said, without apparently noticing the other's tone. "That is to say, I've a pretty good notion what lies behind it, up to a point."

"Indeed?" the Major exclaimed incredulously. "Well perhaps you'll be good enough to explain it, for I'm anxious if I can see any sense in it at all."

"What I know won't be much actual help now, I'm afraid," Father Maloney said. "I'm sorry, but I can explain what this refers to, but that's about all."

"He didn't tell me that!" Father Maloney admitted. "But that was the case. Apparently he'd been saving money steadily all the years he was at sea, and then—'28 I think it was—he bitter with the gamb, being fever that swept over the States, and he started playing the markets. But he played them carefully. He won a few hundred, and he stuck to good, sound stocks, with the result that in the case of 12 months or so, he'd piled up some-thing like a million dollars on paper."

"And then, like a sensible man, he sold out. He knew that the fantastic boom couldn't last for ever, and he'd better get out of it while he could, so he cashed in all his holdings and banked every cent, feeling pretty certain that whatever happened to the dollar, would still hold its end up. And so it was that the crash came and the bottom fell out of Wall-st. he was clear of the market, and felt that he'd played the game very nicely."

"But he hadn't reckoned on what was to follow. The crisis was something far over than he'd thought, and presently he was breaking all over the country. He'd taken a trip to Rio to be out of all the unpleasantness, and he was there when he got the news that his own bank was tottering. He made a frantic effort to transfer the whole of his accounts to South America—but he was too late. It had gone with the rest, and he had lost a million dollars as well as the thousand which he had with him!"

"Well, that put him back where he'd been years before, and when he'd got over the shock he started in grimly to retrieve his losses in the quickest way he could. He invested in a rotten old tub of a schooner, and every time he sold a cargo, he ran into New Orleans and placed all his surplus cash in the hands of a good attorney—of instructions to buy gold currency—of his own sort. He was paying for safety rather than for ease."

"And he worked. In four years, he'd piled up a solid sum again—and then the Volstead Act was repealed. He'd seen that coming through, and he got out of the trade. He ran his last cargo; took his ship into New Orleans, and sold her there for what she'd fetch; and bought himself a small ship. Then he slipped out alone aboard. With all his goods stowed away in the cabin; and the next thing that anyone knew of him was when he turned up here 10 days later. Of course, I knew nothing of all this then, but I happened to meet him when he landed, and he told me the whole story. I took him up to his room, and he stayed with me for a day or two, looking about him. The more he saw of the place the more he seemed to like it, and he finally decided to settle down here for the time."

He paused, looking down at the table thoughtfully, and then went on: "Well, he did. He hired a house here and for the next two years he did local affairs. Then he suddenly announced he was taking a trip to England. I had a notion that he was going back there to live, but he wasn't away more than a couple of months, and when he returned he told me that he'd finally decided to settle down here for the house he'd been living in before, and

Albany and Vicinity
 The Cape Traverse Mission Band held its May meeting at the home of Mrs. J.H. Lord with an attendance of fourteen members. The meeting opened by singing "Father Lead Me Day by Day" followed by the Lord's Prayer in unison. The Scripture, Psalm 96, was read responsively. An interesting reading of the story of the blind men and a reading given by Eleanor Lord and Pearl Cameron. The worship story "Mark Falls and Tries Again" was read by Evelyn Sibley. This was followed by the hymn "Tell Me the Stories of Jesus", after which Chapter Four in the study book, "Sera of the Punjab", was read, the theme of the Chapter being, "Learning to be a Good Christian." The incident of Sera and the cobra was told, which aimed at leading the members to an attitude of greater sympathy with Indian duties and girls in overcoming difficulties and in encouraging them to be brave and persevering. The minutes of the last meeting were read and a short discussion of business followed. Recreation work was then in progress, and a treat of the hostess was much enjoyed. The benediction brought the meeting to a close.

The Carleton Sliding Women's Institute met at the home of Mrs. Stewart MacMicken for their regular monthly meeting on May 9th. The meeting opened with the usual way with the Institute Ode followed by the Creed in unison. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and adopted. The Questionnaire on Canadian Industries was laid over till the next meeting as the Conventer was absent through illness. Mrs. Boyd Lowther gave a very interesting talk on "Growing Strawberries." These talks, covering a different phase of home work each month, are proving very beneficial. The Sick committee reported one sick member remembered with fruit. The school committee reported that blackboard, brushes and other supplies had been purchased. All bills including Correspondence were reported paid. A letter regarding "Home and Country", also a receipt from the Cross branch for work sent in. The secretary was requested to send for more work for the Red Cross. Plans for the District Convention were discussed and the following committee was appointed to see about the same: Mrs. David Murphy, Mrs. W. E. Stevenson and Mrs. Boyd Lowther. A letter from the Y.M.C.A. was read, but as the secretary of the school district was for a house-to-house canvass for subscriptions, this project was dropped. In order to have funds for Institute work it was decided to have a grab bag at the next meeting which will be held at the home of Miss Hattie Rogers on June 13th. Roll call will be answered with a proverb. Lunch committee for next meeting was Mrs. T.B. Gillespie, Mrs. Kenneth Muttart, and Mrs. Boyd Lowther. The program and committee put on a number of interesting contests. A delicious lunch was served and the meeting closed with God Save the King.
