"I always have a feeling that George will disappear late in the autumn and we won't see him again until spring." "What a peculiar notion. Why? "He's such a bear."

TIME IS MONEY

If time is money, some fellows try their best to turn the clock. And that is why they always buy on tick.

"What do you consider the first sign of a coming age?" "Getting mad when anybody calls you old."

CHAPTER VIII "Wilkins!" repeated Ashton, "What sort of farce is this?" "If it turns out to be a farce," said the doctor, "it will be of your making. If I were clothed in your authority and knew only what I know at this moment, I would go to that telephone and call in some trusty man to watch him; and if my guess survives the test to which I am about to put it, I should, within the next half hour, order his arrest." He turned to quickly to see the shrug of tolerant contempt which was all the answer Ashton vouchsafed to this suggestion. He unscrewed the megaphone which had been attached to the instrument to which Wilkins had been harnessed, and attached to it a pair of ear tubes to listen through a glass tube which looked like a thermometer and another tube which terminated in a glass bulb, half full of a red liquid. He put the listening tubes to his ears and started the machine. "Give Ashton a cigar, and don't let him talk," was his injunction to me. For nearly a quarter of an hour after that there was silence in the room; but at last he stopped the cylinder which was revolving in the instrument, took the tubes from his ears and laid them on the table, then he turned to us. "I was right, Ashton," he said. "I know you want an explanation, and I'm going to give it; but if Wilkins is to be at large during the time it will take me to tell the story, I want the responsibility to be upon you, and not upon me. If I were in your place, I should order his arrest." "I'll take the responsibility," said Ashton. "Until I know some reason that isn't absolutely farcical for arresting a man, I won't arrest him. At the same time I shall be glad to hear this story of yours." The doctor nodded. "Well," he said, "since you're in no hurry, I think I'll take time to light a cigar myself." He had it drawing comfortably encased in a big easy chair, his feet stretched out in front of him upon a tabouret before he began to talk. "Do you remember," he asked, "what we chatted about on our drive to St. Martin's hospital the other night?" "Do you remember," he asked, "if my memory serves me correctly," said Ashton, "we didn't talk about the murder at all. You spent most of the time, unless I am mistaken, telling pirate stories." The doctor nodded. "Do you remember my telling you how Bully Franklin came to his end? He was killed by one of his crew as the result of jealousy and a love affair, now that murder had some rather interesting consequences." "What is this," Ashton interrupted, "a parable? Am I supposed to draw some subtle, devious psychological connection between that murder and this one that we're concerned with?" "Not at all," said the doctor. "I know you much too well. The connection between that murder and this is literal. It's about the most direct connection that could possibly exist between two events separated by half a world and nearly two decades of time. The second murder was the logical consequence of the first; the second act of the tragedy, I don't say the last act, because I suspect there's another still to come." "You've actually traced a connection?" Ashton asked with a gasp. "Let me tell my story right-end-to," said the doctor. "You'll see the connection plainly enough when I come to it, I told you, I think, that Franklin's crew became completely disorganized after his death, and that most of the members of it were apprehended and paid the penalty of their crimes. There were two, however, who escaped, one of them was his first mate, Josiah Haines. The other man was Franklin's murderer. He disappeared, too, at least he was never brought to justice. The authorities, for some reason, didn't seem to regard his capture as especially important, for no price was ever put upon his head. That man's name was Henry Morgan." "I had seen what was coming, but it was clear that Ashton had not. His eyes opened wide, his jaw dropped slack, he held his hand to his forehead, his fingers.

SEARCH SHOWS TRACE OF INDIAN VILLAGES BRANTFORD, Ont., Oct. 30.—(By The Canadian Press)—Four ashbeds have been uncovered by the excavators on the Grand River Reserve of the Six Nations Indians near Brantford during a search for the site of an ancient town of the early Indians, and as the four ashbeds were one above the other it is thought no less than four different encampments of Indians have been revealed and it is surmised that, possibly a period of about 60 or 90 years elapsed between encampments. W. J. Wintenberg, of the Archaeological Department of the Government at Ottawa, is authority for the statement of the recent find which is regarded as important from an archaeological point of view. The site of the find is about a mile below Chiefswood, one-time home of the late Pauline Johnson, the noted Indian poetess and it has been reported to the Prant Historical Society. It is known that there were Iroquoian, or neutral Indian settlements in this area centuries ago, and Mr. Wintenberg is quoted as expressing the belief that their identity might be established. He has suggested the placing of markers, indicating the location of the settlements or villages in question. Mr. Wintenberg states that the Iroquoian, or neutral, Indians occupied this district some hundreds of years ago when Father La Roche
