THE FIDDLERS CONTEST

We salute you, Prince Edward Island.

Famed for many goodly things, Not least your oldtime fiddlers, Who are fit to play for Kings.

When one "king" in particular, Took it in his head he knew He could revive old times and dances

While he built good "fivers" too, So he called for a Fiddlers Contest, That so soon became the rage, And he asked that each contestant

About sixty years of age.

When this news reached "the island," Where good fiddlers abound, They staged a splendid Contest, Which was staged in Charlottetown.

A score and more responded, Just 'tween to go, To show the hundreds interested, How they could swing the bow.

Each hopeful spry old timer, Ripe indeed with fame and age, Held his audience enraptured, All the while he held the stage.

The dancers! Words have failed me, There was maid and man and wife, Jigs and reels and breakdowns, Even "Sven" came back to life.

While hundreds applauded, And the Strand Theatre rang with cheer, The Judges proclaimed the winner To be Neil Cheverie.

The prize! A trip to Boston, And the Intercolonial Club the place, Where Neil would fiddle over again, With all the oldtime grace.

Scarcely had he reached that city, Boston, When this message came which read, "Cheverie a winner, now send us Weeks" it said.

Robert Weeks was quickly marshaled, And soon was on his way, To be judged a first class dancer, Or the good old fashioned way.

Back they came triumphant, Weeks and Cheverie, To be feted by the home folks, As they were across the sea.

They not only won the laurels, Another feather for their cap, But helps the Tourist Association prove P. E. I. is on the map.

Now give us more Fiddlers Contests, On with the old time dace, Down with Jazz and the Charleston its racket and knock-kneed prance.

So keep step Prince Edward Island, Take your place in every test, Keep your proud colors flying, your brains and brawn will do the rest.

This Canada of Ours

The Northern half of the continent of North America, extending from the shore of the Atlantic Ocean on the east to the shore of the Pacific Ocean on the west, and from the United States boundary line on the south to the North Pole, belongs to the people of Canada and the youths of Canada are its heirs!

Before the union of the provinces half of the northern half of the North American continent was divided among a number of comparatively small colonies of Great Britain, together with the "Great Lone Land" in their midst. There was Prince Edward Island, known as "The Million Acre Farm," Nova Scotia with its "unpromising shores," and New Brunswick with its immense dense forests and grand dashing rivers. Further west was Old Canada, comprising parts of the great territory now comprehended in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario and on the Pacific coast were the small scattered towns and settlements now included in the province of British Columbia.

At first there was no thought of converting this immense, undeveloped territory, larger than all Europe, into one country under a central government; but there was an idea that Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick might, economically and profitably, be united. So a few leading men in each of these colonies assembled at Charlottetown to think and talk about the matter. Then a bright idea struck some of the politicians of Old Canada, who were in a difficulty. Straightway they, too, came to Charlottetown and asked if they might be allowed to take part in "The Union Conference." Their request was granted; and then there they suggested that there should be, instead of a union of the three Maritime Colonies, a union of all British North America. This suggestion was favorably received by the assembly; and after discussion for several days, the conference adjourned, to be renewed at a later date in the city of Quebec. So it happened that Charlottetown was, literally, the birthplace of "The Canadian Confederation."

The men who were at Charlottetown included the Honorable Messrs John H. Gray, Edward Palmer, William H. Pope, George Coles, Andrew A. McDonald, and Edward Whelan of Prince Edward Island; A. Henry Adams Archibald and Samuel N. McCally of Nova Scotia; John H. Grey, William H. Steeves, Robert B. Dickey, and Edward Chandler of New Brunswick; George Cartier, Hector Langevin, Charles Dinkwater, Thomas D'Arcy McGee and several other representatives of Canada as it was before the union was effected. These statesmen were afterwards known as "The Fathers of Confederation," and as such their names will go down to the school boys and girls of future ages; and through the hearts and minds at Charlottetown, that the course of action and events was planned, the grand result of which was "The Dominion of Canada."

After Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Canada had been united in one Federation, negotiations of British Columbia to the Union. One of the terms upon which the people of British Columbia consented to enter was the construction of a railway over the prairies and through the three Mountain ranges by which our great Northwest is protected from the sea. As gold, silver, iron, asbestos, uranium and other valuable metals. These are the equal in quantity and quality of those of any country in the world. It has been estimated that the young people of Canada, and it will be their duty to make it available to meet the requirements of their own and future generations living in Canada and throughout the world.
