ANIMAL HUSBANDRY

In feeding all breeds of farm animals, good health is essential to success, and in no livestock is this more important than with pigs.

Hogs fed for bacon should reach the market at from six to seven months. This is a very brief period of time and so makes imperative that one of these precious months should be wasted.

Few animals will respond more rapidly than pigs to good food, clean quarters, and sanitary surroundings.

If hogs are given half a chance they will keep their beds clean and pens should be so arranged that the pigs will have a sleeping place, slightly above the rest of the pen, and a good supply of clean straw for bedding.

A pig is not a ruminant like cattle or sheep, and so cannot digest a large amount of roughage. For this reason a hog should be fed more concentrates, and it is able to digest concentrates when fed alone, better than cattle. Pigs can be profitably fed on pasture, but it should be green and succulent, as a pig cannot satisfactorily consume any large quantity of fibre in its feed.

to put on flesh and develop rapidly is an inherited one, and that the pigs which make the most rapid growth are the most economical feeders. We should, therefore, select the way best thriving gilts from a litter to breed from. This is also true of boars. If you breed from slow maturing, hard feeding, stock you cannot expect thrifty progeny.

Good legs and feet are as important in pigs as in all other breeding animals. Quality must never be neglected, and we must breed from the type the bacon market demands.

Growing sows kept for breeding purposes should be developed as rapidly as possible, but should not be fattened unduly. All young pigs should have pasture, and gilts for breeding should be grown on pastures as much as possible. This is not only a cheap way of feeding pigs, but it is a very satisfactory way as well. There is no better pasture for young sows than alfalfa.

This legume provides protein to build up the bone and muscle so necessary to provide the strong body which a sow should have.

It should be kept in mind that a sow will probably carry a large litter of pigs and she must have health, vigor and a strong frame for this purpose. These will be best obtained if she is permitted to take a good deal of exercise in travelling a pasture in search of food.

It is generally conceded that breeding pigs are wintered best in cheaply constructed houses that offer shelter from storms but afford good ventilation. The liberty of a yard and compulsory exercises, as suggested, being important.

Movement Seen As Potent Force For World Peace

Scout And Guide Chiefs Warmly Appreciative Of Interest Shown By Canadian People.

The international aspect of the Scout and Guide movement has been a great contribution to world peace and understanding by fostering friendships between the youth of different lands, religions and races—was emphasized by Lord and Lady Baden-Powell in a press interview following the formal welcome tendered them at the Provincial Building yesterday.

"It has been an eye-opener to see the actual spirit that has grown up amongst the Scouts of the different countries," declared Lord Baden-Powell, Chief Scout. He had attended a great many jamborees, where the boys came together from so many different countries. They just lived together in camp and played games together, and he had never seen such a friendly spirit as has now grown up between them.

This was more evident in Australia, the Chief Scout remarked, than anywhere else, because there is considerable feeling on the color question in that country. It was difficult to foresee how these many colored nations would be received there; but the reception was all that could be desired; in fact, more than one ever expected, the colored boys proving themselves so perfectly equal in efficiency and especially in their love for the movement, that at once realized and appreciated by the public. In the whole march past of all the different troops the colored boys got quite as much, if not more applause, than the white boys.

The Malay boys made themselves particularly popular everywhere amongst the white peoples. They were such a cheery, good natured lot. It was really a wonderful revelation.

"We visited the different countries and saw the Scout movement working under totally different conditions, climate, country and people. It was most gratifying to see they had not only got the movement going in all the nine provinces of the Malay Peninsula, but going on a very good scale, the boys really entering into the thing, getting the right spirit. How they picked up their knowledge is a mystery, and you cannot do it all from books. A great many come over to England, and go through the training there, and then go out and give it to the rest of the Scoutmasters."

The Scouts in Germany

In Germany there were six different bodies calling themselves "Scouts" some of them military, some political. The Chief Scout went out and got them to state the differences of the work, and it was soon found that there was nothing except a political spirit. The politics was dropped and they are all one now.

The Canadian Tour

Asked about his impressions of the Canadian tour, Lord Baden-Powell said that there was a tremendous improvement since he was here last, ten or twelve years ago.

The growth of the movement in numbers has been very great, and more especially they are getting into the right line of work, the right spirit, everywhere. This is due to the Scoutmasters going through training and infusing the boys with the right spirit. The movement has spread to many outlying places, and not merely to the cities.

There was great difficulty in reaching those out on the prairie and outlying farms, and most especially in winter time, it is almost impossible to get at them. "We make use," he said, "of prairie parsons and good natured people who can run through with motor cars." "What influence has the Scout movement upon the youth of the present day, when the whole world is suffering from depression and unemployment?" the Chief Scout was asked.

ing the Scouts responsible for the tidiness of their streets! The progress of the movement in Australia and New Zealand was also outlined.

On returning to England after leaving Canada and New York, Lord and Lady Baden-Powell are proceeding immediately to Sweden. Then, after a brief nine weeks at home, they start on a tour of Africa. Next year they plan revisiting New Zealand. "We seem to have solved the problem of perpetual motion," she added smilingly.

The fact that there are forty-seven countries in which the Scout and Guide movements have taken root was cited as evidence of the international scope of the organization, and its potent influence in promoting world peace and understanding.

The Scout movement, she explained, was launched in England by Lord Baden-Powell in 1908. It spread within a few years to many different countries. In 1920 its founder was appointed Chief Scout.

Lady Baden-Powell's appointment as Chief Guide dates from 1930. The Guides now number one and a half million throughout the world, the Scouts over three and a half millions. There is the closest co-operation between the organizations in every country.

For Scouts over sixteen, Rangers and Rover units have been organized. This year a fourth branch is being considered, for those who have passed out of citizenship, but who wish to retain their association with the movement. The name of this new class has not been decided on.

Farewell Gift For Lady Bessborough

Women of Canada to Present Memento of Years Spent in This Country.

Women of Canada will be given an opportunity to take part in presenting a farewell gift to the Countess of Bessborough. At a meeting held in Ottawa recently over which Lady Perley, wife of Sir George Perley, presided, it was announced that Lady Bessborough had consented to accept a memento of the happy years she has spent in Canada.

A preliminary women's national committee with Lady Perley as chairwoman was formed in Ottawa June 12th to arrange a farewell gift for Her Excellency Lady Bessborough. As in former years the committee asks that the wives of the Governors be responsible for securing subscriptions in their respective Provinces. Owing to the departure of Her Excellency in September the committee ask the matter be given your immediate attention.

Would all those interested kindly send their contributions to Mrs. DeBlois at Government House within the next week. No one is asked or expected to contribute more than one dollar.
