The Surprising Sanctuary

By Leslie Cargill

"I say!" Muriel exclaimed excitedly. "Do you see what I see?" Considering that they had been busy packing while she kept watch, the question was superfluous.

"If her father replied, 'you are gazing longingly at canned grape fruit, we see it all right, but we can't take it with us.' Over there. A sail!" Hugh shaded his eyes. "Great Scott!" he almost gasped. "McFergus!"

"Motor boat it is," Mason confirmed. "Not exactly a sail, but a slight for sore eyes." "We're saved." "Another exaggeration. That engine is sure to be heard by the Jerries."

Keeping the boat in sight was awkward, and he changed to an over-arm stroke. Though slow, it had advantages. McFergus's ripe Doric accents were music to his ears. "Could ye no' wait 'til we landed? Ye didna seem sae pleased w' visitors ten days since."

"Help me aboard." He wrapped a coat about his dripping body. "No, don't go on!" "Loch, mon, ye're not asking for a pleasure cruise?" "Funny things are taking place on Ovarn." Hugh found it difficult to continue. The facts were so preposterous that McFergus might well suspect that the isolation had affected his brain.

Presently the tale poured forth, abridged but sufficient to make his hearer's eyes goggle. "Ye manna come w' us," McFergus insisted. "W'oc delay, Dr. Hunter will ken how to treat it." "Don't you believe me?" "Och, aye! The birds will come tae no harm while ye tek a holiday."

"But, I tell you, the German submarine is there, and the Masons. All I hope is that Ellendorf hasn't seen your boat." "He'll no' do that from yon side of the lake." "Ah, thin you'll help us?" "To hell with Dr. Hunter." "Ah! he's no' foul language on my boat, mister."

"Very well, I'll be off." The mate gripped his arm. "No' sa' fast," he exclaimed. "The skipper may be sceptical, but I preserve an open mind. They do say a U-boat has sunk shipping, though never a survivor has been saved. Sounds like your mon." Hugh shook his head. "Lieutenant Ellendorf says he avoids killing," he said. "Ye he no' a German?" "Yes! Yes, of course he is." "Then he's a liar."

Large advertisement for 'Advance Spring Hats!' featuring several illustrations of women wearing various styles of hats. The text 'Advance Spring Hats!' is written in a large, stylized font across the middle. Below the illustrations, there is a paragraph of text: 'Our millinery Department announces the arrival of large shipments of the latest ideas in headwear for ladies. The accompanying illustrations will give you a good general idea of the types shown although they make no attempt at exact reproduction. This early showing of new hats is exceptionally large and notably fine, emphasizing the ideas that are now being featured by foremost American stores. Of course the factor of price is always a matter of interest. These new hats are for the most part in the moderate price bracket running in a general way from $2.50 to $6.95.'
