The Guardian's Short Story

Coppering Caverly.

By Benson Graydon. Copyright, 1907, by P. C. Eastman.

"I don't care what it costs," declared Caverly. "This man's father nearly ruined me once with his speculations. Now comes his son, who not only follows his father's footsteps in the street, but he clandestinely wins my daughter's heart."

"Those Newtons always were greedy," agreed Tait, fanning the flames of the other's anger. "I don't suppose you want to figure in this matter."

Caverly shook his head. "Not yet," he explained. "Time enough to tell him when he is ruined."

"Trust to me," said Tait confidently. "We will jolt the young man considerably."

Caverly went out chuckling. The night before Emory Newton had had the audacity to demand Belle Caverly's hand in marriage. He made light of the old enmity that had existed between his father and Caverly and suggested that Kentucky feuds and Corsican vendettas were out of fashion in New York. Caverly had ordered him from the house, and now he was scheming with Tait to ruin the boy.

For a week or two Newton did not suspect that his brokers were betraying him to Tait. Runs of hard luck were common enough on Wall street, and he simply seemed to have struck an unusually bad one; that was all. It was Belle who gave him the hint when they met.

"Are you having bad luck with your stocks?" she asked as they sat in the Hargrave conservatory.

"Who told you?" he smiled. "Since when did you busy your pretty head with stocks and things?"

"I heard father talking over the telephone," she explained. "I don't know just what he meant, but it seemed as if

"I think I'm getting out of the game," he said, with a sigh. "What is your price for this stock?"

"Belle," answered Newton. "She's worth every share and script in the market."

For a moment Caverly hesitated. It was hard to surrender, but in the end he knew that Newton would win in his love affair as he had won in the street. He was the son of Caverly's ancient enemy, but nothing mattered. He touched a bell, and the butler entered.

"Send for Miss Caverly," he ordered, and Newton knew that he had won.

though he had hired some one to make your stocks go the way you didn't want them to."

"I see," he said, with a laugh. "I thought it merely a run of luck. I shall have to get even."

"I think it's mean of daddy," she went on. "He won't let me marry you, and he wants you to lose your money."

a check for the profits; wants to know if we keep a bucket shop."

"Send him in," said Tait in a husky voice. It looked like trouble. After Newton had been trimmed the stock had been permitted to rise a few points.

Tait had supposed that a check to cover the increase would be sufficient. If Siegrist insisted upon the actual delivery of the stock and he could neither buy nor borrow, he would be expelled from the exchange for "bucketing" the stock.

"You will have to make good with your stock," he snarled. "If you don't, I'll tell just how it happened."

Caverly knew that if he offered stock with no intention of letting it go he was in the same boat with his broker, and in the end he had to send over to his office for the necessary shares.

There was a heated session between the two men after Siegrist left, but that did not bring back the stock. The registry books closed the following day, and Caverly had lost control by some 2,000 shares which he could not possibly replace in time for the meeting.

That evening Belle was surprised to see Emory Newton passing through the hall into the library. Evidently he was expected, for Caverly looked up coldly.

"You asked for the interview," he snapped. "What is it you wish?"

"I wanted to explain something to you," said Newton. "As you are to be my father-in-law some day, I hate to see you lose control of the P. and N. I bought a put for 7,000 shares at 97%.

In trying to stick me you sold to my agent shares that you were forced to deliver. If you want to purchase them back, they are in the market."

"Your agent," echoed Caverly. "Siegrist your agent?"

"My agent's broker," he explained. "I knew that my man was selling me out to Tait. By coppering my operation I have won double what I have lost. Siegrist is honest; besides, he didn't know."

Caverly sank back in his chair. He had been happy in the thought that he was ruining Newton. Instead Newton had been informed, and he had really been the gainer. Caverly was an old man, and suddenly he felt very worn and feeble.

"I think I'm getting out of the game," he said, with a sigh. "What is your price for this stock?"

"Belle," answered Newton. "She's worth every share and script in the market."

For a moment Caverly hesitated. It was hard to surrender, but in the end he knew that Newton would win in his love affair as he had won in the street. He was the son of Caverly's ancient enemy, but nothing mattered. He touched a bell, and the butler entered.

"Send for Miss Caverly," he ordered, and Newton knew that he had won.

"YOU ASKED FOR THE INTERVIEW," HE SNAPPED.

Seasickness

Positively Cured.

All Wonderful, Harmless Cure For All Forms of Sea and Car Sickness For Sale at Drug Stores. Money refunded if Not perfectly Satisfactory.

A remarkable cure has been discovered from all forms of seasickness, car sickness, climbing, and all nausea caused by motion, which has so positively never failed.

I didn't. I did. Take Mother's Seal's Seasick Remedy that positively never fails!

To prove that this remedy is harmless and that it can never produce any bad after effects, an analysis was made by Milton L. Hersey, M. Sc., Chemist for the City of Montreal, and Analyst of the Province of Quebec. "I hereby certify that I have personally analyzed a sample of 'Mother's Seal's Seasick Remedy,' purchased by me in the open market in the City of Montreal, and my tests have failed to detect the presence of opium, morphine, cocaine, or any other alkaloid or chloral whatever."

A party of six 600 delegates to the International Sunday School Association Convention that went to Rome, Italy, had a supply of this remedy on hand, and not a single delegate was affected with seasickness.

This discovery at last disposes of the prejudice so many people have entertained against the use of medicines as a preventive of seasickness.

Mother's Seal's Seasick Remedy is sold in 50-cent and $1.00 boxes at druggists. If your druggist has not got it in stock, send us the money and we will send you the remedy, all charges prepaid.

Send your name and address at day to the Mother's Seal's Remedy Co., 122 Cleland Bldg., Detroit, Mich., for interesting information and testimonials from many who have used this wonderful remedy.
