Archdeacon Scott

"So he passed over, and the Trumpets sounded for him on the other side."

—PILGRIM'S PROGRESS.

To veterans of the First World War the late Archdeacon Scott was something more than the senior Chaplain of the 1st Canadian Division.

The stories about him are legion. Every battery and battalion had one, for he was at home with every unit and had an extraordinary capacity for getting about among the men.

He would turn up in the queerest places—usually where there was danger, or a maximum of discomfort and boredom; and his presence was like a ray of sunshine in a blackout.

He was the despair of regimental commanders who felt more or less responsible for his safety, for he seemed to have not the slightest concern about the matter himself.

Orders for him to be in the firing line, his practice was to keep as close to it as he could. On many occasions he led stretcher parties under fire.

At one time he was so close to the front line that a group of German soldiers who had been surrounded came up and surrendered to him.

In final, at the battle of the Canal du Nord in September, 1918, he was severely wounded by a shell which exploded beside him.

Archdeacon Scott visited Prince Edward Island on more than one occasion after the last war, each time receiving a royal welcome from his old comrades in arms.

Student Nurses

An increase of 1,800 student nurses is shown in enrolments at various schools of nursing across Canada since the outbreak of war.

The national registration of nurses, held in March, 1943, revealed that while 20 per cent more nurses are now employed in hospitals throughout Canada than in 1939.

"To meet growing demands for nursing service has been one of the challenges offered to the Canadian Nurses' Association since the outbreak of war," declared Miss Lindburgh.

Miss Lindburgh said that with the Dominion grant given to the CNA since 1942 the association has financed 128 bursaries for post-graduate work by nurses in 1943.

Other activities supported by Government grant include the work of the National Adviser, CNA, assistance to schools of nursing in hospitals and universities and to public health organizations to assist in training an increased number of students.

This year the Canadian Nurses' Association has made loans totalling $4,800 to assist nurses in preparing themselves as teachers, supervisors, administrators and public health nurses and for other special fields.

Approximately 2,000 nurses are serving the armed forces, many having signified their willingness to answer further calls.

Bonuses To The Rescue

The bonuses on top-grade hogs announced by Agriculture Minister Gardiner have merit as an inducement for the general improvement in Canadian bacon.

The sure way for hog producers to retain their huge British market is by standardizing on quality and maintaining consistency of supply.

But, points out the Globe and Mail, the new bonuses do not obscure the mess from which it is hoped they will rescue the Federal Government.

And, unhappily for Britain and the home market, there is no guarantee that they can repair the damage resulting from Mr. Gardiner's juggling.

In October, without warning and for reasons still unexplained, Mr. Gardiner slashed the British contract by 225 million pounds a year.

Eastern farmers, forced to import feed because of local shortages, found prices under the new contract unprofitable.

But the Minister also kicked the props out from under Western hog production by boosting feed grain prices.

It was more profitable for prairie farmers to export their

These plans will most certainly be some completely new villages set up—the view, in my opinion, have to be completely modern in architecture.
