THE WOMAN'S REALM— Living & Leisure

DAFFODILS

I have seen loveliness beyond compare. But nothing here I ever know more fair than yellow daffodils beneath old trees. With sun-flecked, gray-sheathed trunks; each passing breeze made all the lovely horde stir lazily. As if it were a tossing golden sea.

—Avis H. Grant, in "American Lyric Poetry."

THE CAT HAD FUN

Twelve policemen surrounded the Ford Hopkins Company, Chicago, a drug concern, here last night and began investigating mysterious noises. Gucis, resident, a half-dozen officers crept up the darkened stairs, floor by floor as the noises continued. Reaching the fourth floor, they came upon a big tom cat chasing a golf ball across the floor and then down the stairs.

NORWAY'S ROYAL FAMILY

OSLO.—Norway's Prince Harald recently celebrated his ninth birthday by working hard at school. The prince, who with his mother, Crown Princess Martha and sisters, the Princess Astrid and Ragnhild, spent the war years in the United States, sits at a plain wooden desk and learns his lessons together with boys of the same age at suburban Stensund, near Oslo. He gets no favours from the instructors and if he fails to learn his lessons he is liable to school discipline as the other students are. He has, however, become a hero in the schoolyard by virtue of his athletic abilities and his strength.

HOW TO BE YOUNG AT 50!

Don't feel "sloved down," tired all the time—just because you've reached middle age! Take a tip from this young grandmother who, like thousands of other modern people, simply refuses to allow her system to become sloved down with toxic wastes—the result of too much rich, fatty food and too little exercise. She knows the natural action of Bile Beans is mild and effective—tones up the whole system by stimulating the liver—and helps to keep her fit and trim. Try them tonight. Ask your druggist for BILE BEANS—the all-vegetable remedy that "Wakes Up Nature."

Wanted Jeep

There was no celebration at the school on the occasion of his ninth birthday, February 22, although the youngsters received hundreds of letters, cables and birthday cards from friends and well wishers in Norway, America, Britain and elsewhere.

His father, Crown Prince Olay, has emphasized the boy be treated on equal terms with the other students and such days as birthdays are not, in his father's opinion, to be an excuse for a holiday. Incidentally, Prince Harald wished for an American jeep as a birthday present, but it was not granted him.

The sisters attend the Nissen Ladies School in Oslo. They have won the respect and love of students and instructors alike for their unassuming ways.

Democratic Girls

On her first day at school 14-year-old Princess Astrid was requested by the instructor to fetch a washcloth at the caretaker's office. Astrid did not know where the office was, but she returned triumphantly with the requested article.

The sisters dress in the careless fashion of Canadian high school girls and mingle freely with her classmates in the schoolyard. The girls are good at composition, but Princess Gagnhild, 16, says she has trouble replying to a "theme" like this: "When I went out shopping with my mother."

"We can't go out shopping," she sees. As soon as we ally outside, all people make a hubbub about it."

Q. What should a hostess do when she has some week-end guests who develop into disagreeable bores?

A. All she can do is to endure them as graciously as possible, realize that the week-end will soon pass, and be grateful for the consolation that it will not happen again.

Q. May one have a telephone number engraved on a visiting card?

A. No; but it is correct to have an address engraved on a visiting card.

Q. Should a husband and wife ever be placed together at a dinner table?

A. No; they should be given other partners.

Ellen's Diary

By an Island Farmer's Wife

There was a pleasant surprise awaiting the folks this morning. It caused a flutter of excitement, which reached a disconcerting climax when Jamie, that grandson of ours. He asked several questions about the tapping and laughed gleefully when James told him the news. Polly, too, laughed broadly when she left the milking and came to his mother's side. The first lamb of the season had come! There he was, standing close to his mother, his curly coat all black. He regarded us with merry eyes, friendly ears and a pretty nose. As usual, Jack had opened the gate to let the ewes have their nightly ramble, telling himself at the time for he was aware of the lambing season as well as the fact that the night would be the last night. It was a mysterious hand that had guided this green-eyed bundle into the shelter of the shed. James found her there this morning, while the others still nibbled on grass. The recent chill had come from the air and in his place a balminess had crept in. Polly had the small one. "Watch her stamp her foot at me!" Polly said. Her concern was not for the lamb, but for the inquisitive Pard, who with his head at an interested angle, looked in at the newcomer.

Jamie had his own doubts about the matter. Perhaps he was reluctant to make a decision, but once or twice of certain ones of his small playful kittens. One day he was sitting on the floor, and another at play in their cosy bed in some barn nook. But the very next day, no matter how well a small lamb might seem to be doing, neither "hither nor hair" of them unless one lone fellow might recognize the sudden disappearance of this morning with concern in his tones: "Are you going to keep him?—for the time?"

Q. What should a hostess do when she has some week-end guests who develop into disagreeable bores?

A. All she can do is to endure them as graciously as possible, realize that the week-end will soon pass, and be grateful for the consolation that it will not happen again.

Question of Marriage Or Education Difficult One For Ex-G.I.

DEAR MISS DIX: I am a man of 26. Have been in the Navy four years. As a veteran I am entitled to four years of school. To get an education has been the dream of my life, hoped for but impossible of realization until now when the Government makes it a possibility. BUT there is a woman in the case. I am in love with a girl who claims that she loves me and we had planned to be married as soon as I got out of the service. Then the problem of my going away to college came up, with discussions that are leading to a beautiful smashup.

I love her and want her, but I have nothing to offer unless I go to school. She wants me, but on the condition that I stay at home and not go to school. I know no trade. I have no money. I would have to do factory work, with no chance for a future if I cannot get more education. But with an education I believe I can make good and eventually give her the things that I would like to give my wife.

What do you think of school and deferred marriage. I can't see myself following the hardships of my father. What do you think, wife or school?

DECISION DIFFICULT ONE

ANSWER: That is, of course, a question that you will have to settle for yourself, and as Puck said long ago about marriage in general—whichever way you do, you are likely to regret it. However, I would urge you in making your choice to consider two or three points very carefully.

The first is that a man who has the longing for an education that you have must gratify it, or else go through life unhappy and frustrated, and when he has the opportunity to make his dream come true, he must take it. You would not make a good factory worker because your heart would never be in your job. Nature fashioned you for a different life and if you talk her intentions, you will pay the price in failure.

The other thing that I would call to your attention is that if your girl does not appreciate the advantages of an education and sympathize with your desire for one, she would not make you a consensual wife. You would always see things from different standpoints. She would lack the imagination to look to the future instead of at the present, and she would never understand why you bought a book instead of pork chops. A wife can pull a man down as well as build him up.

DEAR MISS DIX: I am a boy of 19. Just out of the Navy. For the past four months I have been getting a lot of a married woman who says she is in love with me. I have been intending to break up with her, but I know if I do the will foul me because she has a bunch of letters I have written her. Anyway, I don't want any trouble with this girl and her husband because they live in my home town and my name would be dragged through everything.

What shall I do?

ANSWER: Well, son, you are certainly in a hot spot and I trust that the experience will teach you to sit on your hands the next time you are tempted to write incriminating letters to a married woman. Say what you will to them, but for goodness sake, don't put it on paper.

What is the only thing that you can do to save the situation is not to have a violent break with the married lady, but just to gently and unobtrusively drop out of the picture. Cool off in your love-making. Don't go to see her so often. Keep away from other girls for the time being so as not to arouse her jealousy. And see if you can't wheedle those love letters out of her.

DEAR MISS DIX: I have just returned from overseas duty to find the girl I love engaged to a civilian. Before I left for sea duty she told me that there would never be anyone else in her life, but on my return I find her in love with another man.

Is there some article in the G. I. Bill of Rights protecting me from such a tragedy? If so, I would greatly appreciate knowing what it is.

ANSWER: Unfortunately, the stony-hearted men who devised the Bill of Rights did not take love affairs into consideration, so they provided no protection against the fickleness of women. The best thing you can do is to get another girl.

HANDY FOR VEGETABLES

Egg Lemonade

2 beaten egg yolks
Juice of 2 lemons
1/2 cup sugar
1/2 cup water

Beat the sugar and egg yolks together. Add the lemon juice and nutmeg. Stir all together and add water. Serve with whipped ice.

Chocolate Eggnog

1 teaspoon cocoa
2 teaspoons sugar
1 egg yolk
1 cup hot milk
Mix cocoa and sugar and add to well beaten yolk. Stir in the milk slowly and serve hot or cold.

After making a light angel cake and many other dishes using only the whites of eggs, there are a number of yolks left over. If they are not to be used immediately, put the unbroken yolks in a small container adding enough cold water to barely cover them, then cover the dish and put in a cool place. Broken eggs may be stirred and lightly covered in a bowl or jar.

Extra yolks may be used in cakes, milk beverages, pressed through a sieve as a garnish for salads or creamed dishes, or made into egg sauce. Yolks may also be substituted in many recipes for whole eggs, using three yolks for each whole egg called for in the recipe, and for each extra yolk used, one teaspoon of fat is deducted from the recipe.

Use Blotters

NO MORE GOOD-BYES

By Margaret Malr

On a cold afternoon in January when Susan arrived to visit her, it was to find matters had reached a thrilling climax. Lydia seized Susan by the arm, led her triumphantly into the sitting-room, shut the door to ensure confidential secrecy, and then announced her momentous news. Dwight Sanderson had asked her to marry him and they were formally engaged.

Lydia was obviously entranced. She poured forth to Susan an ecstatic eulogy of Dwight Sanderson's appearance, manners, methods of love-making, bank balance and social position. "You must meet him Susan," she finished up excitedly. "I'm determined that you shall meet him without delay. So I've asked him here this afternoon, and he's coming!"—she consulted with proud ownership a small diamond and platinum wrist-watch which Susan had never seen before—"he's coming in a quarter of an hour's time, and will be here at four o'clock."

"Oh, how nice!" Susan said sally, summing up her enthusiasm with an effort. "How lucky for you marrying an American, Mummy. It's always said, isn't it, that Americans make the best husbands? They spoil their wives and think nothing's too good for them."

Lydia looked purringly content. "But tell me about yourself, Susie darling. You're looking a little better, so tired. We've only got about ten minutes to talk—how's the dear baby?"

"Oh, getting on well now, thank's Mummy."

"It's very kind of Eleanor to have baby all this time," Lydia said. "Every kind of her. But of course, it's so much easier in the country. And Eleanor never did care about going out much, did she? Tell me, Susie, does she still wear those awful tweeds?" Lydia's pink cheeks creased into what once were dimples. "But, darling, I mustn't abuse her. Tell me about the new house. Is it anything like Broadhurst?"

"Smaller," Susan said slowly, "and more modern I quite like it. But, of course, Cockford isn't like the forest. It's much more suburban and they're on a main road."
