Falconwood Hospital Holds Fire Drill

A very efficiently conducted fire drill was held yesterday afternoon at Falconwood Hospital after the staff and inmates of the institution. In the case of a real fire it is the duty of the one who discovers it to telephone the fact and its location into the superintendent's office from which word is sent to the engineering plant for the sounding of the general alarm and the different wards informed as to the location of the blaze. The nurses and attendants on duty in the different wards at once take up their respective posts. The patients are moved to the exits in the parts of the building remote from the fire, the fire hose extended, and wherever necessary the chemical extinguishers brought into commission. Immediately after the alarm sounded at 2 o'clock yesterday, Dr. Goodwill, the Medical Superintendent, Premier Stewart, Hon. J. A. Macdonald and Mr. E. H. Beer the Provincial Fire Marshal, made a tour of inspection through the entire building, visiting every ward and inspecting the fire equipment. Notwithstanding the necessary slight confusion of the first few moments, the drill was found to be proceeding with despatch and the patients, though in many cases not fully understanding what was going on, carrying out their instructions explicitly. The attendants were at their posts and had their equipment in action all in a very short time. With equal quickness the patients returned to their rooms and the institution resumed its usual orderly routine.

Orkneys Produce Strange Animals And Plants

(United Press)
KIRKWALL, Scotland, Oct. 7.—The Orkneys, which always have been a source of delight to scientists, have this summer been the playground for a party of Edinburgh zoologists who are introducing to a number of new species of animal and plant life. The investigators spent much time in tracing the development and learning the habits of a little known species of watersheep which is found only near the island of South Ronaldshay. These animals feed on seaweed and inhabit the beaches of the island. Nature developed for them legs from eight to ten inches longer than those of a normal sheep, which allows them to wade for food. As a result of their unusual diet their meat has a salty taste, their wool is particularly coarse and strong, and they grow larger than normal sheep. The zoologists are also studying creatures known as "Shollies" and what are called "sca-anemones," both being found only in the Orkneys. The latter as yet are unclassified and have no scientific name. They are plants which grow open and when covered by water leaves like dandelions, but when the tide is out they fold up and almost entirely disappear. They are not flowers, as their habits indicate a carnivorous animal existence. They kill their victims by poison and then devour them, and their leaves act as tentacles to grasp their food.

City of Baltimore Seeks To Preserve Historic Landmark

(United Press)
BALTIMORE, Oct. 7.—The Shot Tower, which has stood as a landmark at Fayette and Front Streets in Baltimore for almost 100 years, will be purchased by the city of Baltimore and preserved, if efforts of a number of citizens and organizations are successful. Following the lead of the Daughters of the American Revolution, numerous patriotic and other societies and many individuals appealed for the preservation of the old landmark. Representatives of these societies held a conference with the mayor and it was decided to acquire the tower by public subscription. Late in August, when the owners of the tower and the mayor failed to agree on a purchase price, an ordinance was passed by the city council providing for condemnation of the tower in case the committee seeking funds had not raised the necessary amount within a certain time. With this time limit approaching expiration, and the committee still in need of several thousand dollars, the tower seems likely to come down. The tower is the highest of its kind in the world and is regarded as the oldest munition factory in the United States. From a base four feet in diameter the shaft rises to a height of 246 feet. The column tapers as it ascends, so that the diameter at the top is only twenty feet. It was built in 1828, Charles Carroll, signer of the Declaration of Independence, having the cornerstone. The interior of the structure was destroyed by fire in 1878, but was rebuilt and shot dropping continued until 1892. Then the tower was abandoned for shot making because of the advent of improved methods of manufacturing.

Progress Levels Famous Buildings Near Charing Cross

(United Press)
LONDON, Oct. 7.—The changes of time and the steady blows of the pickaxe have sent another London landmark to destruction in a cloud of dust. This was the building at 24 Cockspur Street which for generations housed the establishment of a famous London clock maker. Affixed to the front of this building was a great white-faced clock surmounted by a time-ball, and very old Londoners recall that riding take the War Office of a morning from his home in Piccadilly, the Duke of Wellington would draw reins to correct his timepiece by the one which hung out high over the street. And now the old clock with its time-ball, which became a landmark to Londoners of a succeeding generation who, on foot or on horse, could view it from the far side of Trafalgar Square, has disappeared with the demolition of the building of which it was so long a part. The passage of time has brought strange changes to this part of London which became known as Charing Cross after King Edward I erected a Gothic cross there to mark the spot where his Queen's coffin rested in the thirteenth century, when the royal funeral procession halted on its way to Westminster Abbey. Why Cockspur Street came to be so named no antiquary appears to be able to say for certain. Conjecture has it that it was because of a fancied connection with the
