

The Value of Security

It is worth a good deal to you to be sure that your prescription is filled with absolute accuracy.

We afford you such security and it costs you nothing extra. We use the finest drugs obtainable. They are not only pure, but they are of the standard strength. Drugs can be pure and yet so uncertain in strength as to be perfectly valueless. We make you safe on all these points. Our years of experience enables us to give you the best possible service in prescription filling.

REDRAFT THE NOTE INTENDED FOR GR. BRITAIN.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23.—The new American note for Great Britain on interference with neutral trade probably will be re-dated because of the British order making cotton contraband.

The note has been virtually completed. It now will be altered and probably will treat at length the question of the validity under international law of Great Britain's latest action.

While there is no intention to abandon the claims for payment for cotton seized prior to the British order, those cases now have a different status and a complete record of this phase of the dispute can be prepared and presented. Cases under the contraband order must all go before British prize courts, and there will be no informal negotiations as there have been in connection with previous seizures.

The new American note, it is understood, will lodge formal protest against the placing of cotton on the contraband list, and a lengthy diplomatic exchange probably will follow. It is considered likely by some officials here that the dispute eventually will be settled by arbitration.

HOW FARMERS SHOULD LOOK AT EGG CIRCLES

Sir,—I want to ask you the favor, in justice to our farmers, of publishing some plain facts about the Egg Circle Movement, as a large number of us see them, and as all of us should see them.

About three years ago the Ottawa Department of Agriculture sent a man down here to help us with our poultry and eggs, especially the marketing of them, and we know what he has done for us in improving things all around.

Most of us are quite determined never to go back to old methods, but some, unfortunately, cannot see far enough ahead to make up their minds what they will do, and just a few are unwise enough to fall right into the traps laid for them by those who want to break us up and keep us apart. There are enough of us though who have taken this business to heart and try to keep on with it to make it certain to stay with us without assistance from anyone, and it is just as well that those who are trying to beat us out should know this.

We see now how much better it is to sell all our goods according to quality and what a great thing this will be for Prince Edward Island in the future. Those of us who have taken any trouble to look into matters, know that the Candler Station is doing right and paying what the eggs are really worth.

This work was not started to hurt the merchants, and so long as our merchants are willing to deal fairly in all lines we know we should be unwise not to support them.

The time has come, however, when some plain speaking should be done and that it should be understood that there is a large number of us farmers who know something of the methods used to beat Egg Circle prices by those who are interested in preventing farmers uniting to get more for our labor and investment. The fact that some few of our Island merchants have supported us and managed Egg Circles for us, has prevented those of us who have been watching that matter closely, coming out publicly with the facts long ago, but there is a limit and it must be understood that we are organized and we do not intend to allow the present state of affairs to go on without bringing out the facts.

This warning to those who will be wiser not to lose our friendship, hope will be sufficient.

Now just a word to some of the farmers. You know that the Egg Circles have helped us and that we would not have such prices for eggs as we have without them. Some take advantage of this and do not support the movement; others just sell their eggs where they can get the best price, and of course have to suffer in some other way. Just a few actually oppose the work being done for their own benefit. Isn't it unwise? How can we ever expect to take our places as business men in the country if we go on as in the past? Is it sensible or manly to criticize those who try to help us if we allow the wool to be pulled over our own eyes in this manner? Don't you think, fellow farmers, that most of the past failures have been our fault and not the fault of those who do their utmost to show us the way to co-operation? How can we ever hope to get up if we do not pull together and make a good effort?

I am Sir etc.
JOHN F. ARSENAULT,
Urberville, Prince County.

A GERMAN COMMANDER.

The Berliner Tageblatt makes the announcement that the command in the defence of the Dardanelles has been entrusted to Admiral von Usedom, who is now known as Usedom Pascha. Admiral von Usedom served in the German navy from 1871 until 1910, and on his retirement was attracted to the Emperor William's military suite. Two months ago he was appointed aide-de-camp general for services already rendered to the Dardanelles. Admiral von Usedom commands the German cruiser Hertha in the Far East and took part in the relief of Peking. From 1902 until 1904 he was in command of the Emperor's yacht, Hohenzollern. His chief of staff is said to be Captain von Jan-

BRITISH WIN GREAT VICTORY AROUND SUVA AND ALONG THE DARDANELLES

CHICAGO, Aug. 24.—An allied victory at the Dardanelles which he intimates will go far to offset the successes of the Germans in Russia is chronicled in a dispatch to The Chicago News from its staff correspondent, Louis Edgar Brown. His story graphed from Mudros, a town in the island of Lemnos, near the eastern base of the Allies, on Friday, and relayed from Athens today, is as follows:

"Through a bold stroke the British Army has dealt the Turks a humiliating and disastrous reverse, resulting in the capture and destruction of the main lines of communication between Constantinople and the forces defending the Gallipoli Peninsula, thus entirely cutting off the ammunition and food supplies that had moved down the Peninsula from the base to the army in the field. This strategic success, it is calculated, upon the Balkan political situation of the fall of Warsaw. The demoralization and the surrender of the Turkish Army defending the Gallipoli Peninsula are predicted for the near future. The eventual fall of Constantinople are now said to be inevitable, and it is only a matter of time before the Twentieth Century Crusaders will raise the standard of Christianity on the Mosque of St. Sophia.

"The result was brought about by a gigantic force. Huge and heavily equipped forces were concentrated by the British and French on various island bases near the Asia Minor seacoast. The Allies made a great display, indicating an intention to invade Asia Minor. Thereupon the Turks threw every resource of the nation into the defense of the seacoast of the Asiatic provinces. After they had thoroughly fortified the coast, warships of the Allies made several violent demonstrations against the newly constructed works. The Turks rushed every available man to the defense of Smyrna, Adramyti, and other Asiatic cities.

"Suddenly, during the night of Aug. 13, thousands of troops at half a dozen bases embarked on transports, destroyers, and trawlers and steamed hastily to an unknown rendezvous. Great secrecy was maintained, and even many of the staff officers were ignorant of the objective. The Turks, learning that the British army was moving, prepared to give it a hot reception at any point along the entire coast of Asia Minor.

"Like a thunderbolt from a clear sky the British invaded Gallipoli Peninsula at Suva Bay, where the Turks were hopelessly unprepared for an issue. During the night an immense fleet gathered in the Gulf of Saros from all parts of the compass, bristling with khaki-clad soldiers, who were beaming with cheerfulness and trembling with eagerness.

"The huge expeditionary force—one of the largest launched at the heart of an enemy's country—was flung against the Turks at the spot where they least expected it. The landing was orderly, scientific, and unopposed, and it was followed by a rapid advance to a position four miles inland, which was immediately fortified.

"This move entirely severed the enemy lines of communication, with the result that 400,000 Turks, or what is left of the Seventh Army Corps, defending the peninsula are nearly surrounded, and virtually besieged. The enemy's retreat is now impossible. Entirely cut off from escape, it must either fight to the death or surrender.

"It is now a question of how long the Turks can persist on the supplies they have. It will be an utter impossibility for them to get enough for their daily needs, because the British command both land and sea communications.

"The landing was splendidly executed. Under the supervision of the navy, half a thousand small boats, launches, and pinnaces, bristling like porcupines with fixed bayonets, carried the troops quietly ashore, and returned repeatedly for fresh loads. Each man was equipped with an entrenching tool, ammunition, and food for three days. Immediately after the landing fifty Turkish outposts surrendered, and there were the only soldiers of the enemy seen during the day.

"The spectacular bombardment and continuous roar of cannonading, which were a feature of the original landing at Sed-el-Bahr, were conspicuously absent this time. Everything was quiet and orderly as if there was a peace manoeuvre and not a shot was fired until nearly dark.

"Turkish reports say that 60,000 British troops landed within twenty-four hours.

"When half the force was ashore it was divided into two sections, one marching inland to the south of Salt Lake, now a sun-baked and deeply ditched plain, and the other marching north beyond the lake. The forces deployed through the salt marsh, covering as much ground as possible. The first section moved northeast and the second southeast in an attempt to make a junction with the Australian and New Zealand forces north of Gaba Tepe.

"Two miles inland the forces halted for a brief rest. Reconnaissance parties reported that there were no Turks in sight, and the troops advanced to make as much ground good as possible before the enemy offered resistance. They covered six miles before nightfall of Saturday. Artillery might transports, water wagons, kitchens, hospitals were brought ashore in sufficient quantities for temporary purposes.

Turkish Reinforcements Attack

"Turkish forces were hurriedly mobilized and rushed to oppose the invasion, the first detachments arriving just before sunset. Though hopelessly outnumbered at first, the Turks received reinforcement after reinforcement, and then there began the biggest battle that has yet been fought on Gallipoli Peninsula.

"The correspondent continues that both sides worked manfully, and scores of small battles followed, the battle field out of range of destroyers and cruisers. During Saturday night the Turks mobilized 70,000 men, and the battle continued all day Sunday, the British digging themselves in bit by bit as they advanced. Towards night the battle front was a some what broken, and the centering on Suva Bay. It had a radius of five miles. Great waves of Turks swept on the front only to meet destruction. Further north right under the very guns of the fortress of Bulair, the French made a false attack to distract attention from the real British attack. A Greek legion in this French landing party composed of volunteers from Turkey, fought till they died almost to a man. The French forces having served their purpose, then

Withdrew to Ships in Waiting Lying in Gulf of Saros

This was represented as a victory for the Turks.

"On Monday, the second morning after the landing, the British made a violent night flank attack, with terrific loss. The Australian and New Zealand forces holding the territory to the North of Galva-Tepe, which had been heavily engaged for four days, concentrated simultaneously on the left flank, the attack resulting in the junction and consolidation of the British and New Zealand forces.

"The result was represented as a victory for the Turks.

WAR STAMPS INCREASED P. O. REVENUE BY NEARLY MILLION DOLLARS

OTTAWA, Aug. 23.—The war stamp on letters, receipts and cheques has increased the revenue of the post office department during the first four months of the present fiscal year by about one million dollars, or a 30 per cent. increase.

But the war stamp has made Canadians less ready to write letters. This is shown by the fact that the mails bulk about one third less than during the same period last year.
