TRUE

This gardening truth's so very plain There is no doubt about it; The flowers die for want of rain, The weeds get on without it.

1st Hobo: Bill sez tho' he does nothin' but roam he expects some day to be rich and happy and live at ease. 2nd Hobo: Wal, all I gotta say is his mind's wandering as well as his feet.

He: Does Ted love you as well as he used to? She: Better. I've taught him a lot.

THE GREEN SHADOW by HERMAN LONDON

He pondered the riddle for a while, but in the end he was forced to give it up. Slowly he moved about the room, his mind in a curious state of restlessness, now and then peering at a book or a piece of bric-a-brac, his thoughts circling around the warning note and the one-armed man.

which he prized highly, but little that could interest a burglar in search of readily marketable loot. There was the secret drawer in the desk of course but even that. — A sudden suspicion entered Dale's mind. The hidden drawer contained little of material value, but there were papers and other articles which had an intimate bearing on the career of The Picaroon.

In a mood of growing irritation he searched the adjoining rooms, the library, the bedroom, the dining room, even the kitchen, looking everywhere for something that seemed to be just beyond his mental reach. His disquieting impressions refused to take on tangible shape. He heard Bilkins return and with his trudging gait take himself off to sleep. For a little while he stood at the fire-escape outside the bathroom window, alternately looking down at a murky backyard and up at a sparkling sky.

Noiselessdw, with no other thought than that he must not let the intruder escape, Dale stepped inside the room. He closed the door behind him and slipped the bolt into place, then moved forward as quietly as he could. She did he make a dash for the door, the trespasser would lose several precious seconds while manipulating the bolt. Without a sound Dale approached the desk. Then he paused straining his ears for sounds. A muffled breath sounded in the stillness, and it guided his sudden leap. A gasp sounded. Two bodies crashed. Dale caught hold of something—a sleeve.

Now he paused and listened, but for the moment he could hear nothing. He waited, wondering whether Bilkins could be prowling about the house at such an hour. It was not very likely, he decided. Bilkins, despite his evil countenance, usually slept the sleep of the just. Then he recalled the vague, bewildering impressions that had been with him for an hour before he retired. He hurried into dressing gown and slippers, and in a moment he was gliding softly across the floor of the adjoining room.

"Get back!" the voice commanded. "Get back, or I—" The voice, the green light, the emerald walls and furnishings jumbled crazily in Dale's brain. Only one clear thought gleamed through the chaos. Dr. Moffett! Who else could it be? A green light, a voice, a face that could not be seen— He felt a little mad. He hurried himself forward. He struck out into emptiness. Another laugh, and then a knuckled fist crashed against his jaw. Another blow, a third. He reeled dizzily, fell. The green light faded out into nothingness.

Insidious Eye Strain We use this adjective advisedly. Sufferers from Eyestrain may have perfect vision and therefore do not suspect the presence of any evil defect. The motive power of the entire human organism is Nerve Energy. Normal eyes, it is computed utilize about 20% of this Nerve Energy, but when Eyestrain is present, a much larger proportion is required. Hence defective eyes through their consumption of an excessive amount of Nerve Energy may seriously affect the functioning of other organs of the body and produce ill health.

10 Ton Freezers For Fishermen

OTTAWA, July 18.—In accordance with a recommendation made by the Royal Commission on Atlantic Fisheries, a 10-ton freezer suitable for use by groups of fishermen for freezing and storing bait has been designed by the Fisheries Branch and it is announced by the Deputy Minister of Fisheries that copies of the plans and specifications are obtainable without charge on application to the Branch here.

In addition to the freezer itself the plans show a suggested extension of the building providing for twenty tons additional of storage. With the specifications there is included an instructional clause as to operation of the reports which produce refrigeration by means of an ice and salt mixture.

The plans are for a frame structure thirty-six feet long, twenty feet wide, and fifteen feet high in the post, with a shed eight by twenty feet, at one end for receiving and crating fish that are to be frozen for bait. The freezer is divided into a room for storing ice, a cold storage room, and a freezing chamber. An entry room outside the freezing chamber and cold storage room is designed to prevent warm air from entering from outside when fish are being transferred to storage after being frozen. The freezing chamber is equipped with six retorts and fish will be frozen by being placed in pans between the retorts which will be filled with the mixture of ice and salt. The necessary low temperature in the cold storage room will be maintained by means of galvanized iron retorts, filled with ice and salt, projecting through the ceiling from the smashing floor above the storage room and freezing chamber. Access is provided at one end of the smashing floor to the ice storage room and at the other end to the shed, where salt may be stored, so that ice and salt will both be readily accessible. The walls, floors and ceilings of the cold storage room and the freezing chamber are to be insulated with double sheathing and water proof paper, both inside and out, and all air spaces are to be filled with planer mill shavings to lessen air circulation.

Bad Storm On Lake Michigan

(Special to The Guardian) CHICAGO, July 19.—Boats were torn from their moorings, lake shore drives were closed to traffic, and property damage running into thousands of dollars was threatened tonight as one of the worst storms in recent years on Lake Michigan where the water is normally high, sent fifteen foot waves crashing against the Chicago breakwaters. Bathing beaches all along the north shore, many of them just repaired after the disastrous Easter storm were imperiled and passenger and freight boats on the lake were believed to be in danger from the high wind and waves.
