Aeroplane For For Dying Woman

(By Dominion News Service)

LONDON, Sept. 6.—A woman slowly dying of an incurable disease was taken from London to Brussels in a special aeroplane fitted up as an aerial ambulance.

The woman who had expressed a wish to die in her own home in Brussels, was a patient in a London hospital, and was driven to the London Air Station, Croydon, in a motor ambulance.

One of the Napier D. H. 34 liners of the Instone Air Line which usually accommodates 11 people, had been fitted with a bed instead of the usual seats.

The ambulance drove straight alongside the aeroplane, and the patient was lifted on a stretcher from the ambulance to the bed in the air liner. The 450 horse-power Napier engine had been specially silenced, and the patient was carried the 200 miles between London and Brussels in 1 hr. 40 min. in comfort.

A doctor and a nurse accompanied her on her flight.

Whole Family Leaps From Balcon

(By Dominion News Service.)

LONDON, Sept. 6.—Henry Spencer, the well known aeronaut, yesterday ascended in a balloon at Roundhay Park, Leeds, with his son Percival, aged 14, and his daughter Ena, 16.

On attaining a height of 3,000 ft., all jumped off with parachutes and had an exciting race to the earth.

All three landed safely about a mile from the park.

"THE LOVE PENDULUM"

CURIOSITY

Chapter 70

The days went on now in quite a new way. I had sufficiently settled my house to have leisure for other work, and with Ellen to clean and cook, I really had all day for other things.

So I gave myself up completely to the care of little Connie, who needed all the attention I could give her. I began making her dainty little frocks, and I sent to a smart shop in the city and ordered an extravagant amount of clothes for her.

Connie was well over a year old now, nearly a year and a half, but so small she scarcely seemed that age. She was very pretty and grew more so as the days passed and the good air and good food made her chubbier and brought a little pink to her cheeks. She had blue gray eyes with an odd, grown up expression, very solemn eyes as though she had seen and understood the tragedy she looked upon daily in her mother's home. She had the softest, finest brown eyebrows and long lashes and pale brown hair, which had ruddy lights when the sun burned it a little.

She lisped an odd language, making herself understood in a few syllables and by rather expressive gestures. She was much too quiet for a baby, and much too good.

"I wish she would be disobedient and naughty," I said to Colin a few days after her arrival.

Colin laughed, and watched her with amusement, as she played around the porch where we were sitting.

"The feminine instinct is sadly lacking in her," he observed. "I bought her the grandest doll I could find—and look at it! It lies despised on the lawn, the sun fading its magnificent complexion, while she hugs a toy steam engine to her breast. She lavishes all her maternal feelings on miniature railway trains!"

But Connie tired quickly of her toys, all but the mechanical engine, which went everywhere with her and was never wound up to run. One day when everything failed to amuse her, Colin gave her some paper and an old paint brush, and some colors, and always after that, we found that bright colored crayons or paints would keep her happy. She did nothing, of course, but make splashes of color over the paper. She was much too young to have any sense of form or drawing, but the mere splash of brilliant color on the paper gave her something to look at that seemed to make her contented and happy.

"A future artist," Colin said laughing. "I shall give her lessons in a few years and we shall see what a genius she will be."

Colin was around every day. I had not expected mother Taylor to like him, and asked her to let him stay in her house as a favor to me, because I thought a quiet summer in Wellsville would do him good. But she developed a great fondness for him. I did think she would like the baby. She did not. She regarded Connie in an odd, impersonal way, and seemed uncomfortable when she was around.

Of course I invited my friends in the village to meet Colin. And, of course, they came. Colin breakfasted at mother Taylor's, but the other two meals were usually at my house. And often we took the car I had hired, and with Connie and Ellen and a packed basket of food, we spent the day somewhere off in the country.

Connie thrived from such a life and even the city-bred Ellen liked it. Colin did very little work and grew much homelier as the hot sun brought out thousands of freckles on his skin. And I—well, I was at peace when I was with the people. But I had come to the village to forget Win and the city, and now I found I had to fly with these people to forget the village!

For there was something in the air of the place that was antagonistic to me. I could not tell what it was, and I hated to ask mother Taylor.

It was not lack of sociability. Perhaps it was the sort of sociability. When I was at Ella's house, the old crowd I knew gathered as before and we had little dinners and card parties and we danced now and then, quite as we used to. But it was different, because of my odd position among them.

"I'm a married woman, but without a husband," I said to Ella once. "Consequently, none of the unmarried men want to bother with me, which is quite all right, and when one of the married men takes me home after I've been out of an evening, I feel he resents it, because he'd much rather go straight to bed and not walk around to my place. I'm glad Colin is here to play escort, I'm not so isolated."

Ella laughed a little and colored—as she always did when she was embarrassed.

But they all came to meet Colin and they all came to see Connie.

"How old is she?" May asked, watching the child playing. I told her. There was silence. We were all busily sewing. May suddenly asked:

"When were you married?"

I stared in surprise at this.

"Two years ago the first of next August."

Silence again, while the red of embarrassment deepend in Ella's cheeks. It was tactless of May, but May was always tactless, and why should Ella blush so over this too-frank curiosity of May's? That, and other things, I was to find out.

SALVATION ARMY WORKERS KILLED

NEW YORK, Sept. 6. —All Salvation Army officers and workers in Japan are believed to have lost their lives in the earthquake, according to a cable reaching the organization's headquarters here today by a round-about route. The message came through San Francisco, where it was received by Col. Masahut Kobayashi, who for many years has been in charge of a corps of Japanese Salvationists on the Pacific Coast. The Salvation Army training school and hospital were in the heart of Tokio, and as a result have been completely wiped out. Commissioner and Mrs. William Eadle, and a full staff, were in charge of the hospital when the disaster occurred. Commander Miss Booth immediately replied to the message with an announcement that money and supplies would be rushed to the stricken areas of Japan by the Army with all possible speed.

The Salvtaion Army has a headquarters staff at Tokio with about 100 native members and a few European officers. The Canadian officers stationed in that city are Major and Mrs. Pudmire, formerly of Toronto. Major Pudmire is financial secretary at Tokio, Captain Burrows also of Toronto and Captain Carr, of Montreal.

Commissioner Charles Sowten Toronto headquarters is expecting a report from Japan from international headquarters.

SURPRISE PARTY

On the evening of Aug. 30th the members of the Orwell Cove Mission Band together with the ladies of the district gathered at the home of Capt. J. A. Nicholson for the purpose of expressing their goodwill to Miss Alice Nicholson who is soon leaving the district for Prince of Wales College.

On behalf of the Orwell Cove Mission Band Miss Annie Nicholson presented Miss Nicholson with a beautiful fountain pen and an eversharp pencil and the following address was read by Miss Irene McLeod.

To Miss Alice Nicholson,

President of Orwell Cove Mission Band.

We the members of the Orwell Cove Mission Band, on learning that you are so soon to leave us, have gathered here tonight to express to you in a small way our appreciation of your earnest and faithful efforts in our behalf and the pleasant manner in which you have performed your duties as a leader, and as you have decided to return to college, to gain further knowledge, our prayer is that God may abundantly bless you, and that you will be successful in all your undertakings and that we, as pupils may follow the good example you have set before us.

With our best wishes we ask you to accept this small gift, as a reminder of our happy meetings together.

Miss Nicholson replied to the address, thanking the members for the gift and expressions of goodwill and wished the band continued success.

Ice-cream and cake were served after a few hours of social intercourse interspersed with music the evening came to a close by all uniting in singing "God be with you till we meet again."

Marriage After Many Difficulties

(By Dominion News Service.)

LONDON, Sept. 6.—A "happy ending" took place at St. Margaret's Westminster, to the wedding anxieties of Miss Lucile Baldwin, daughter of the well-known American banker, and George V. Harris, a New York stock broker.

This was the sequence of events: —The wedding had been fixed for yesterday. Canon Carnegie, who was to officiate, had arranged to sail for America today. There would have been just time, however, for a special license to be obtained form the Archbishop of Canterbury if the Mauretania, bringing the bride and bridegroom had not arrived four hours late.

This accident led to the following "hustle."

Monday, 4 p. m.—Mauretania reached Southampton.

Tuesday:—Application to Faculty Office in London, for license, Archbishop had left over night for Sutherlandshire, in the extreme north of Scotland.

Tuesday night and Wednesday Morning—Special courier's journey to Sutherlandshire (about 620 miles) with papers for Archbishop's sanction.

Wednesday, 7 p. m.—Telegram from Archbishop authorising wedding.

Thursday, noon—The wedding.

Only about 20 people were allowed in the church when the wedding did take place; but a large crowd cheered the bride and bridegroom as they drove away afterwards.

Hunting With Bow and Arrow

(By Dominion News Service.)

LONDON, Sept. 6.—In a desert region of West Africa, resembling the Russian steppes, birds are killed with bows and arrows.

G. L. Bates, an American ornithologist, who returned recently from a bird-collecting expedition in the Northern Cameroons and Nigeria, saw the natives aim with deadly effect.

He has related his experience with these skilled bow-men.

A march of a few days from Duala brought Mr. Bates and his party of native carriers to 6,000 ft. above sea level.

"Here, at only six degrees north of the Equator, I was glad to have a fire to sit by," he said.

"The little birds of these high altitudes were different from those found on the plains below. Some were of kinds which had not been discovered on any mountain in West Africa, but had been collected before on Mount Ruwenzori, or on the mountains of Abyssinia.

"My carriers had brought with them the cross-bows with which they can let fly arrows which are mere splinters of the leaf stalks of the raphia palm.

"For birds which hide in thickets or tall grass, through which my 'boys' could creep stealthily and get close, these bows were the best, for birds of the open, not so easily approached, the guns were the best.

"In their own country the 'boys' shoot monkeys with poisoned arrows, and afterwards eat them.

"During the last stage of the expedition I went down the Benue River in Nigeria in a canoe. The river is thronged in March and April with sand pipers, which live on fish.

"Some of them are said to breed in the far-off Arctic, and, therefore travel backwards and forwards thousands of miles between the Arctic and Nigeria.

"I discovered more doves than in any country I have ever seen. They were cooing all the time. Their presence in such numbers probably accounted for the large number of eagles and hawks, who prey on doves."

Mr. Bates has collected over 7,000 specimens of birds of which the Natural History Museum, South Kensington, in the past 25 years has acquired the majority.

VETERAN AUTO RACER KILLED.

ALTOONIA, Sept. 6. —Howard Wilcox, veteran Indianapolis automobile racer, was fatally injured in the inaugural 200 mile race in the new Altoona speedway this afternoon when his car skidded and overturned on the 117th lap. His neck was broken. Wilcox died a few minutes later as he was being taken to an emergency hospital at the speedway grounds. Wilcox was in third place when the accident occurred.

Driving the 200 mile grind without a shop Eddie Hearne, another veteran driver, won the race. His time was 1.47.37.35 at the race of 111 ½ miles an hour. Perry Wonderlich was second, Dave Lewis third, Fred Somer fourth, Benny Hill, fifth, Frank Elliot, sixth, Leon Duray, seventh and Tommy McKeown eighth.

By winning today's race Hearne took the lead in the 1923 automobile racing championship with a total of 1,202, they declared.

Your Health is at Stake if You Suffer from Constipation!

Every man, woman and child who has constipation or constipation symptoms should leave no stone unturned to get instant relief! Keep away from the dangers of pills and cathartics, which are almost as much to be dreaded as constipation itself. Your physician will recommend Kellogg's Bran because it is ALL BRAN—and it is Kellogg's Bran that will give permanent relief if eaten regularly.

Most cases of Bright's and diabetes can be traced to constipation; in its milder form constipation is responsible for sick headache, nausea, pimples, sour breath, etc. And, we say right here—and guarantee what we say—that Kellogg's Bran, if eaten regularly, will give you permanent relief.

Kellogg's Bran is wonderful as a food as well as wonderful as a natural means of relieving constipation. Kellogg's Bran contains important mineral salts; it contains elements that are necessary in making bone, tissue and blood—yet, it acts as a sweeper, cleanser and purifier.

Eat Kellogg's Bran as a cereal. You'll enjoy its nut-like flavor. Or, sprinkle it on or mix it with hot or cold cereals. Many like it cooked with hot cereals. Two tablespoonfuls of bran should be added in each instance. You have missed much not to have eaten Kellogg's Bran made into muffins, raisin bread or many other bakery batches. Recipes on every package. Prominent hotels, restaurants and clubs serve Kellogg's Bran in individual packages. All grocers sell Kellogg's Bran.
