Disposition of First Importance in Choosing Husband -- Flee From Temptation While There is Time, is Dorothy's Advice to Perplexed Bachelor

Dear Miss Dix—I have two suitors. The good points of one are that he comes of a long line of college graduates and is a college graduate and student himself. Fine physique. Good dresser. Good conversationalist when inclined to talk. Strictly moral and temperate. Ambitious to be rich. His bad points are: Very temperamental. Too frequently glum. Selfish. Sarcastic. Lacking in common courtesy. Dominated by jealous mother. Undecided as to future vocation. Is either lazy or physically unfit.

The second young man's good points are that he is a tireless worker. Very ambitious to make a fortune. Lover of home. Kindly and considerate. Generous. Good talker. Good physique. Physically fit. Refined taste. Has already accumulated a nice little fortune. Bad points: Only one year in high school. Parents middle class. Homely at first sight. Only fair dresser.

I myself have graduated from high school and have had one year of college, am a good musician and successful in business. Which one of these young men would you bet on in a matrimonial venture?

WONDERING GIRL.

Answer:

I would have no hesitation in putting my money on No. 2. He has all the earmarks of the Great American Husband who is the blue-ribbon prize-winner husband of the universe, with none other like him.

Evidently No. 2 is a go-getter and that is a big factor in his favor, not only because to have a comfortable home and good clothes and a nice car are a potent source of happiness to every woman, but because every wife thrills with pride over a husband who has in him the ability to succeed and to hold his own with other men.

But the thing that would make me decide in favor of No. 2 is his disposition. That's the thing that a wife has to live with, day in and day out, and it is what makes or mars her happiness. A man may be as handsome as Valentino, as wise as Solomon, as moral as a saint and as rich as Henry Ford and his wife will be a miserable woman if he is grouchy and surly or sarcastic and cutting in his speech and if he treats her with rudeness and selfishness.

It is the men like No. 2 who are tender and sympathetic to their wives, who are cheerful and amiable, and at the very sound of whose key in the lock of an evening every one brightens up, that keep their wives on their knees thanking God for their luck in having got them for husbands.

As for No. 2's disabilities, they amount to nothing. Every man gets just as much education as is coming to him, and some of the most cultured and highly intelligent people I know have never seen the inside of a college. Books are free to all. And out of a middle-class homes all over this country of opportunity of ours have come the men that have done the big things that put us on the map.

It seems to me that your No. 1 beau is a poor risk. He not only hasn't accomplished anything practical in the way of establishing himself in life, but he is not even on the way. Apparently he lacks initiative and industry and while he would like to be rich he wants some one to hand him a fortune on a silver salver. He hasn't the grit to hustle out and go after it himself.

But worst of all is his disposition, and I don't think you would care very much for his college degree when he was glooming around, too sulky to speak.

And any girl certainly is hunting for trouble when she marries a man who is dominated by a jealous mother. DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Miss Dix—I am a young man who has gone out with many different girls without ever finding the "Right One." But now I find that there is a young married woman in love with me. She is the mother of three children. I could learn to think a great deal of this woman, but there are several different things that keep me from it. Should she get a divorce and should I marry her if she does?

PERPLEXED BACHELOR.

Answer:

Inasmuch as you are not in love with the lady but only hovering on the brink of it, I should advise you to flee from temptation while the fleeing is good.

Of course, if you were already the victim of the grand passion, against which it is powerless to struggle, your situation would be tragic and one to call forth sympathy, but while you are still on the safe side of the fence and in full possession of your faculties, you must yourself perceive the folly of going out to hunt for trouble.

And you will find it a plenty if you continue your affair with the married woman, for home-wrecking is a messy business out of which no man comes with clean hands. Surely you must feel a good deal like a sneak thief who is robbing a hen roost when you try to steal a man's wife away from him and when you encourage a silly woman in being false to her marriage vows.

The Golden Rule is a pretty good code to live by, and you know how you would feel about it if some other man was flattering your wife and telling her how beautiful and wonderful she was and how you didn't appreciate her and giving her kisses with a real thrill to them.

And if you had little children, wouldn't you think the man was a pretty mean, yellow dog who broke up your home and took them away from you?

And why on earth do you want to marry a divorced woman and saddle yourself with a ready-made family when there are so many pretty young girls around?

So my advice to you is to urge the lady to stay with her husband and make a home for her children and to forget all about being in love with you. And I certainly urge you to seek safety in flight. It does no young man any good to be mixed up in a scandal with a married woman. DOROTHY DIX.

Canadian Cookery For Canadian Women

By Mari Moore. Specially contributed to the Guardian for Guardian Readers.

Raisins From British Colony Are should be chock full of raisins and currants grown in our own Empire.

Is there any reason why we women can not have a more or less continual conference on this subject of buying Empire goods?

Already I am receiving requests for Christmas cake recipes, which means the raisin season is here, and every Canadian Christmas cake should be chock full of raisins and currants grown in our own Empire. The buyer for a large wholesale grocery house tells me some most interesting news about a new shipment of Australian raisins that has just arrived for Christmas trade.

Australia's chief competitors in the trade are Greece and United States, but Australia has a natural advantage over them for her crop ripens in June, and cargoes are in Canada by September, whereas those from other raisin producing countries are arriving in November when they should already be made up into Christmas cakes and puddings, and snugly stored away to ripen to perfection for the festive season. Wholesale grocers frantically wire demanding when their shipments will arrive, while buyers despair and retail customers decide not to have raisins in their Christmas cakes this year. That is bad business.

But the raisins are here now and you can start limbering up the old mixing arm. Australia is on her toes too for she has her eyes on "big business," the first essential of which is service: A fruit commissioner tours the country securing orders and ascertaining just what type of raisins is in demand at each centre—what quality, what type of pack. He orders the grade of fruit from his native base exactly as ordered by the consumer. Even we retail buyers can appreciate the size of that task—and Australia is the only dried fruit producer which is offering this almost personal service. From other producers you take what you can get.

For the next few minutes he was engaged in making a blood test of the dead man. Having completed the operation he placed the blood-covered slides in an air-tight case, and transferred the outfit to his pocket.

"I don't know very much about Gaynor yet," said Webster, who had watched the operation with interest, "but I hope to have quite a number of details by tomorrow. I do know, however," he went on, "that he has been enormously successful in business. He has been in London for well over twenty years, and I suppose it is only natural that, like most successful men of his calibre, he has made enemies as well as

For The Cook

GRAPE JELLY

4 cups (2 lbs.) juice. 1/2 cup bottled fruit pectin. 7 1/2 cups (3 3/4 lbs.) sugar. Stem about three pounds fully ripe grapes and crush thoroughly. Add 1/2 cup (4 oz.) water, bring to a boil, cover, and simmer 10 minutes. Place fruit in jelly cloth or bag and squeeze out juice. Measure sugar and juice into large saucepan and mix. Bring to a boil over hottest fire and at once add bottled fruit pectin, stirring constantly. Then bring to a full rolling boil and boil hard 1/2 minute. Remove from fire, skim and pour quickly. Seal hot jelly at once with paraffin wax. This makes 11 eight ounce glasses.

A Morning Smile

A Scotsman was strolling along the quay one day, when his dog stopped beside a basketful of live lobsters. Instantly one of the lobsters snapped its claws on the dog's tail, and the surprised collier dashed off through the street yelling with pain.

The fishmonger for a moment was speechless with indignation, then, turning to his prospective customer, he bawled, "Mon, mon, whistle to yer dog! Whistle to yer dog!"

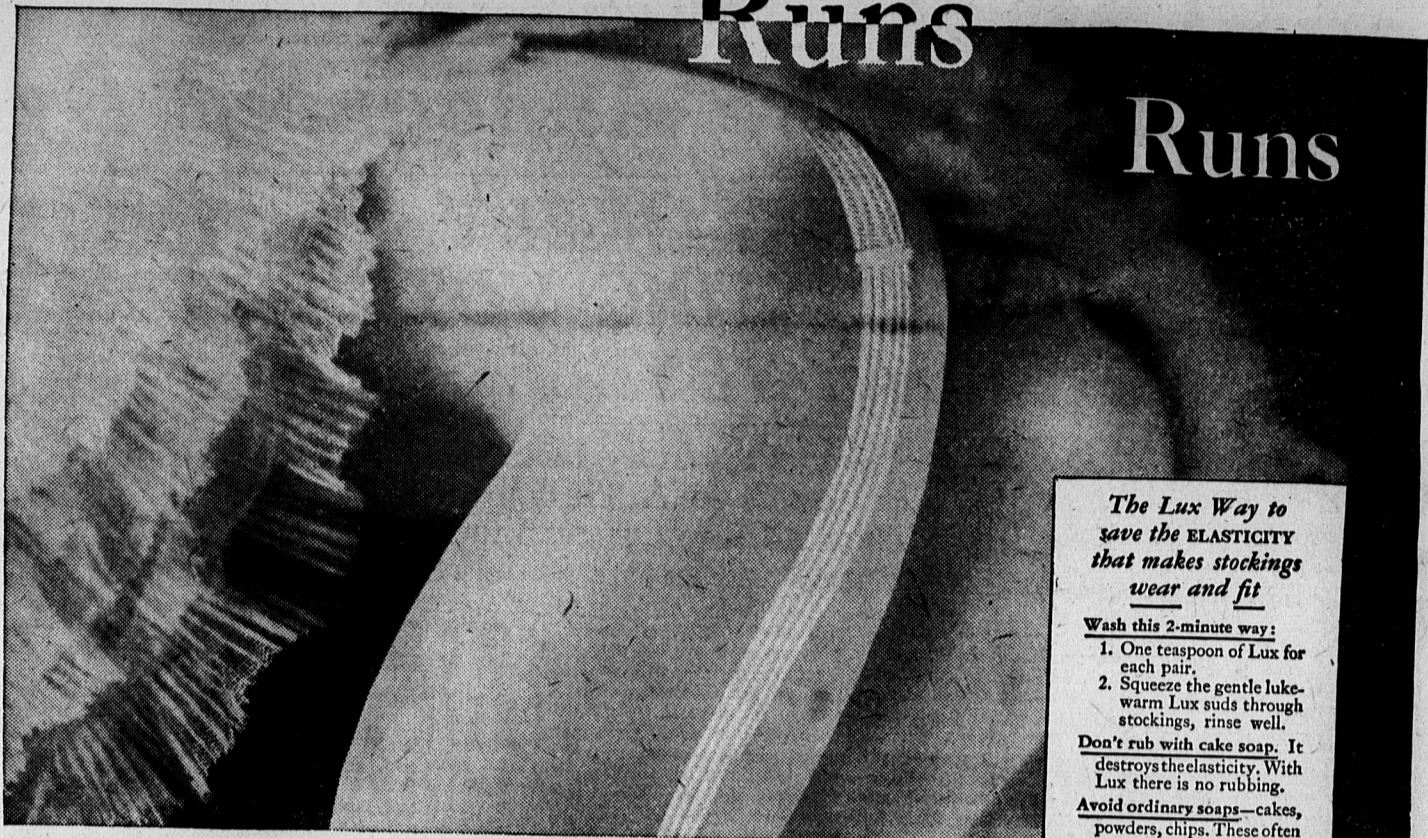

"Hoots, mon," returned the other, complacently; "whistle to your lobster!"

NO MORE TEARS

MRS. HOFFMAN was eighteen when her baby was born. Within a year she had a serious operation. Then the flu. Her nerves went to pieces. She cried over nothing at all. It was an unhappy household. Her grandmother told her about the famous Vegetable Compound. That's how old and trusted a remedy it is! "I have taken six bottles," she says, "with marvelous results and I am thankful for my increasing health."

RUNS

Why blame stockings when YOU may be at fault?

Are you washing away the ELASTICITY that makes stockings wear?

"ANOTHER PAIR GONE!"—but don't blame the stockings. Do you know YOU may have caused those costly runs?

New stockings give under strain—stretch and spring right back again—because they are elastic.

But if you wash away the elasticity, the lifeless threads, instead of giving break. The slightest little strain—their a wretched run!

With Lux, you preserve this precious elasticity. That is why this easy way of washing makes even your sheerest, loveliest stockings wear and WEAR.

Lever Brothers Limited, Toronto Soapmakers by appointment to their Excellencies the Governor-General and Countess of Beasborough

The Lux Way to save the ELASTICITY that makes stockings wear and fit

Wash this 2-minute way:

- 1. One teaspoon of Lux for each pair. 2. Squeeze the gentle lukewarm Lux suds through stockings, rinse well.

Don't rub with cake soap. It destroys the elasticity. With Lux there is no rubbing.

Avoid ordinary soaps—cakes, powders, chips. These often contain harmful alkali which weakens silk threads, fades colours. Lux has no harmful alkali. Anything safe in water is safe in Lux.

Don't use too-warm water—it fades colour. Dissolve Lux in hot water and cool to lukewarm for use.

MILLIONS of women keep hands lovely at small cost with Lux in the dishpan.

ZORA The Invisible

By J. R. WILMOT CHAPTER II (Continued)

As an adjacent clock was booming out the hour of midnight with ponderous voice, a young man clad in a neat suit of tweeds, turned in at the main entrance to the block of offices known as Zenith Buildings.

He could not have been much over thirty—bronzed, clean-cut and wonderfully healthy. He was one of those men who appear as if they have been gifted with perpetual vitality. There was an unconscious rhythm in every movement of his lithe body. He looked just what he was—an athlete, every inch of him.

He found a constable posted outside the door of Montgomery Gaynor Limited. The young man nodded to the officer and was admitted without challenge.

"Hello, Peter!" greeted the Inspector. "Sorry to drag you from the comfortable depths of your club armchair at this hour, but I've got something here that I think will interest you." Peter Blayne smiled. He knew that when Divisional Inspector Webster sent for him there was always something unusual. Together the pair passed into the private office where the body of its former occupier still reposed statue-squally magnificent in the swivel office chair. Webster explained to the young man what he had gleaned from the caretaker and the doctor. "There he is!" he announced. "What do you make of him?" Peter Blayne—no one ever called him Doctor Blayne, though he was a specialist in forensic medicine and some of the higher branches of medical science—surveyed the rigid figure in the chair with a critical eye. He ran his delicate, yet capable fingers over the body of Montgomery Gaynor as though searching for something concealed in the clothing. Next he examined the eyes and they appeared to excite his interest. "Do you mind, Webster," he said glancing up, "if I do something not quite in keeping with the usual practice? I happen to have a little set of useful instruments with me, and I'm rather curious."
