FIXING THE CLOCK

"Can you get my pendulum clock to work?" asked the simple-looking person in the jeweler's shop.

"We will endeavor to," replied the jeweler.

The customer unwrapped a small parcel.

The jeweler gazed in wonderment at the contents.

"But this is no use," he said. "In order to mend the clock, we must have the whole thing. You've only brought us the pendulum."

"Well," replied the customer brightly, "it's only the pendulum as won't go."

CHOICE OF JOB

An Oakland County farmer was trucking a load of live stock to the market and had a blowout just as he was passing the State Insane Asylum grounds. As he repaired the tire two inmates watched him from the other side of the road fence. "Are you a farmer?" one called to him.

The farmer replied that he was, without looking up from his work.

"Have you ever been crazy?" asked the second inmate.

At that the farmer turned around to face his questioner. "Not that I know of," said he.

"Well," and the second inmate nudged the first, "you better try it, 'cause it's a sigh easier than farmin'."

A disorder of turnips, popularly known as brown heart, which has discouraged growers in the Maritimes, has been carefully studied at the Fredericton and Charlottetown laboratories of the Botany Division Dominion Department of Agriculture, and it has been found that sodium borate exerted a most favorable effect in practically freeing turnips from this scourge.

Plea For Study Of Ethno-Botany

ABERDEEN, Scotland, Sept. 10—(By Canadian Press)—Capt. T. A Joyce, president of the anthropological section of the British Association for the Advancement of Science today made a plea before that body for a more vigorous study of ethno-botany, claiming the rapid spread of stimulants, narcotics and food plants throughout the world has a direct bearing on diffusion of culture.

Capt. Joyce reached this conclusion at the end of his presidential address to his section of the association in which he dealt exhaustively with the origin and diffusion of use of yerba Mate, an infused drink made from shrub indigenous to Paraguay and southern Brazil.

In his research the captain referred back to Latin authors or the Spanish missionary of early occupation days of the 17th century to show the length to which this herbivorous drug, a violent aperient and intoxicant as it was used then, drove the population in its efforts to secure it.

He showed that from the centre of its origin in Paraguay the use of the plant, known scientifically as Ilex paraguayensis, spread with great rapidity through Argentine Chile and Peru and soon became known in Europe. Thousands of tons of it are now used annually in Latin America.

Thousands of South American Indians once were virtually enslaved by their Spanish masters in the commerce that gathering of the plant built. They were paid pittances and were addicted to use of the beverage made from the leaves of the plant with hot water that induced them to barter their shirts and other clothing to obtain it.

Capt. Joyce drew attention at the end of his paper to the rapid spread throughout all civilized countries of the use of maize, commonly known as Indian Corn, a native American grain unknown to Europe before the advent of Columbus. He said familiarity with this cereal grew so rapidly it is extremely difficult to trace movements of its cultivation from people to people.

Regular Changes Necessary

You have often read or heard that corrections that assist in reading & etc., should be changed every two years or oftener. Are you sure you understand why? It is because the human eyes changes constantly. A two year change in the eyes requires a change in the correcting lenses. Be re-examined regularly.

Eskimo Take To Motor Use In Far North

(By R. K. Carnegie, Conadian Press Staff Writer)

CHURCHILL, Man., Sept. 10—(By Canadian Press)—The outboard motor will make the Eskimos great trappers. That is the opinion of those here in close touch with the Eskimos when they arrived here in large numbers this season.

The motor gets the northern native from place to place more quickly, but that is not the chief cause for his improvement in fur catching efficiency. It is because it gives him something to work for.

"The Eskimo does not naturally like to trap," W. E. Brown, Hudson's Bay Company agent here explained. "He likes to hunt. He loves to go after the walrus, the seal or the caribou. He will only trap when he needs money. He used to require it for rifles and ammunition. As soon as he got enough for that he would stop. Now he wants to own an outboard motor or a complete motor boat as well as his rifles and ammunition. So he has to bestir himself to get more fur."

The people around Churchill are strong for the Eskimo. They are shrewd bargainers but so very congenial and likeable. One of the surprising things about them is the rapidity with which they gain a knowledge of machinery. They are born mechanics.

Several marine motor engines were sold to the Eskimos this year and delivered to them at Churchill. That is one advantage to these north men of having a railway running to that port. Within a week they would be able to take the engine apart and set it up again.

In the north they are often able to make crude parts to get the machine going when something breaks. With their unlimited patience, they have no greater happiness than learning the "whys" of a gasoline engine.

Indians of the north on the other hand take little or no interest in engines. Mr. Brown did not know of a single Indian owning a motor boat.

Perhaps the greatest authority on Canadian Eskimos is Mgr. A Turquetil, Roman Catholic bishop at Churchill. He has spent many years among them. He expects the Eskimo population to increase.

"There used to be a great deal of murder among the Eskimos," the bishop explained. It was not because they were blood thirsty but because they feared one another That was primarily due to the great distances in the north.

"The Eskimos separated, some locating in one section where the hunting and fishing was best, and some in another. They would seldom intermingle and would come to regard each other as different tribes. Then one tribe would view another tribe as an enemy and soon there would be murders if a member of one tribe happened to fall in with another tribe. This is being changed. Efforts are being made by our missionaries to make them understand they are friends The tribes will associate with each other more extensively and they are inter-marrying so the old fear of one tribe for another is disappearing.

"Then there used to be the practice of killing girl babies with the result there would not be enough women for the men and this resulted in further murders. This has all been changed."

The bishop added that according to the writing of historians, there were many more inhabitants in the sub-Arctic region 200 years ago than there are today. He expected however that with changed conditions, the Eskimo population would hold its own, and probably increase.

He is firmly convinced the Eskimos came to Alaska from Asia They spread over the northern sections of Canada, always keeping near the coast and never in the woods where they might be killed by the Indians.

ESKIMO TRIED AND CONVICTED ON STEAMSHIP

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld., Sept. 10—(C. P.) — Plucked from his northern home, an Eskimo had a sample of white man's justice administered in unique jurisdictional surroundings. He was arrested on a charge of burglary and summarily tried and convicted aboard the S. S. Kyle by Captain Abram Kean, O.B.E., justice of the peace and peer of Newfoundland's sealing fleet.

The specific count against Renatus Tuglavina, of Hebron, Labrador, charged him with breaking into the Hudson's Bay Company store there last winter and stealing food and other goods worth $190. He and a group of Eskimos in several rafts upon the store, officials said.

At the company's request, Lieutenant-Comamnder Baker and other officers of H. M. S. Challenger, surveying party at Nain proceeded by dog team to Hebron and brought Tuglavina back to Nain, where he was formally arrested by police from St. John's.

Captain Kean happened to be a passenger on the Kyle when the prisoner came aboard. To save time, the Justice Department granted authority for the trial to be held at sea. A missionary from Nain acted as interpreter.

Tuglavina confessed, claiming that he and his family had been starving and, together with other Eskimos, resented treatment they had been receiving. Pointing out that goods other than food had been stolen, Captain Kean sentenced the accused to two months of hard labor at Twillingate Hospital. The Eskimo broke down when he heard a translation of the judgment and gave the court a promise that his burglarious activities were over.
