A WELCOME VISITOR — Col. S. S. Weatherbe of the Ordnance Department of Munitions and Supply, Ottawa, arrived by plane last night for a three week visit. He will be accompanied by his son Alfred of Bellevue and daughter, Mrs. M. N. McGowan, Kilmuir, and their families. This is the first visit of the Weatherbe family to the Island since last June.

PICK THEM YOUNG — F. S. Grisdale, deputy foods administrator for the Prices Board, warns housewives in the market for chicken that unless they know their fowls they may be paying the price of a fresh young chicken for an old hen. Prices for various grades differ across the island and thrifty shoppers should ascertain the ceiling prices for fowl prevailing in their areas. Also, housewives should beware of paying higher prices for live fowl than they would for the dressed product.

CORN SYRUP — Consumers are asked by the Prices Board to cooperate with retailers who are trying to distribute the available stocks of corn syrup as evenly as possible. There is no regulation governing the sale of corn syrup, making its price to be determined by the production of a doctor's certificate is not allowed. Ration officials suggest that consumers leave corn syrup for mothers with small babies.

PRAISE FOR SERVICEMEN — Servicemen and their families make the best possible tenants, says Mrs. Harvey Agnew, supervisor of housing registries for the Prices Board. She reports from many centres in Canada to support her statement. These reports, Mrs. Agnew says, indicate that the opinion is pretty well universal that members of the forces make the most desirable of tenants.

SNACKS A HELP — Canada's war industries recognize a short rest period morning and afternoon, with a light mid-shift snack at an adjacent production, and what has been proved true of industrial workers applies also to others. Mid-shift rest periods and snacks for themselves. They will find that the short relaxation with a cup of soup or tea, a glass of milk or fruit juice or some fresh fruit will pay dividends in increased energy and vitality.

CONSERVATION THE WATCHWORD — If present day beauty aids are to stay, Canadian women will have to practice frugality in their economy. Lipstick containers, mascara cases, rouge and powder compacts and all such fancy devices are being replaced by their friends in the use of a holder containing which can be used over and over again for refills, now are becoming in the "musts" on personal savings lists. It is economical to buy the larger containers and jars of creams and lotions. These do not evaporate or become rancid they last longer and are covered in a cool place. For current use, creams and lotions can be put in smaller jars and kept at hand.

FIVE MOBILE CANTEENS SUBSCRIBED BY PEOPLE OF CANADA

The following cable has been received at the Montreal headquarters of the Queen's Canadian Fund: "The Queen acknowledges with warm thanks the generous gift of $2,500 sent to Her Majesty from the Queen's Canadian Fund. The Queen has decided that the best use for this sum was to fill certain shortages of mobile canteens. This money will provide five canteens and maintain them." These five mobile canteens have been bought with money subscribed by the people of Canada and sent overseas by the Queen's Canadian Fund. They will bear the inscription "Presented by the Queen's Canadian Fund," and will be used to bring hot drinks to raid victims and those obliged to do war work in lonely places without means of supplying themselves. These canteens will go about their errands of mercy bringing to the bereaved people and goodwill from Canadians. They will be yet another example of Canada's wish to alleviate Britain's distress, as far as it is in her power.

Fight Insect Enemies Before They Can Spread

Victory gardens are sure to be invaded by insect enemies, and to protect your crops you must be prepared to fight for them. Just as weeds are kept down by digging them while small, insects are held in check by attacking them when they first appear, before they can begin their amazing rapid increase. You can fight them with very primitive weapons, but it is much easier when you have modern mechanical aids, such as a duster, or a sprayer. For small gardens, the most economical equipment, and most easily sold as a syrup, may be easily prepared for dusting by the following method: Fill a quart jar two-thirds full of hydrated lime, and put in a few pebbles. Drop a little at a time, two tablespoons of 40 percent nicotine sulphate on the lime. Cover the jar and shake thoroughly. The nicotine will combine with the lime without making it lumpy and the resulting dust will disperse of any spirit it touches. In dusting or spraying, the object should be to create a cloud of dust or vapor which will envelop the plant, and cover both upper and under sides of the leaves. Leaves need not be damp for dusting, and the dust should be no more heavily than a coat of face powder. Do not apply spray in a stream, but in a cloud of vapor. Some form of duster or sprayer will be available to every Victory gardener and since both classes of equipment are scarce, no time when needed one will be available. Groups of neighbors, or community plot holders, can use the same equipment. In adjoining corners, dusting or spraying done to all gardens at the same time, as pests will travel from one to the other, and if one plot owner is neglectful, and the diligence of his neighbors will be of small effect.

Dorothy Dix Says —

DEAR DOROTHY DIX — I have a neighbor who has moved into this city in order that her husband might work in a defense plant. She is a bright woman, but has had little education. Consequently her English is so bad that many people do not care to have her take part in neighborhood and school affairs, but I hesitate to say anything about it for fear of hurting her, as I like her very much and think she is a fine woman. Any other words? MRS. C. A. R.

ANSWER — There are plenty of such books. One that I would particularly recommend is "Fittful in English," published by G. P. Putnam's Sons. It is simple and easily understood that I am sure she would get great help from it.

Advise her to get a copy and to memorize a page of it every day. A good idea would be to keep it open on a table where she can pick out a word or phrase every time she goes by and practice using it until she gets the swing of it.

But a woman who is as clever as this one, and who has a husband on the war should put her pride in her pocket and enroll in some school where she can take a course in English. If she hasn't time to do it in the day time, she can go to a night school. There is no excuse for people being handicapped by their English in these days.
