When seating yourself at the table unfold your table napkin and lay it across your lap in such a manner that it will not slide off onto the table. A gentleman should place across his right knee. Do not get stuck into your neck like a child's bib.

Celery, cress, olives, radishes, and relishes of that kind are eaten with the fingers. The salt to be eaten with them should be placed on the plate if there is not an individual salt dish—not on the cloth. A familiar dinner, even with a few friends, can be made quite attractive and satisfactory without very much extra effort. It may consist, first, of good soup, then fish garnished with suitable additions, followed by a roast, then vegetables and some made dishes, a salad, crackers, cheese and olives, then—dessert. If this meal is well cooked and nicely served it is pleasing to almost any one. Drink sparingly and gently during the actual progress of the meal. Never drink with any food in the mouth. The knife should be grasped freely by the handle only, the forefinger being the only one to touch the blade and that only along the back of the blade at its root.
