

A Friend to Women

If Lydia E. Pinkham were alive today she would be one hundred and nine years old. Her descendants continue to manufacture her famous Vegetable Compound and the integrity of four generations is behind the product. In many families today, mothers are teaching their thirteen year old daughters to depend upon the same medicine their grandmothers praised back in 1870.

The Golden Girl

CONTINUED
BETROTHAL

Forgetting her own fear, So-so took Fred by the shoulders.

"Fred, Fred, what is it?" she cried, shaking him back and forth. No response and So-so caught his hand pressing her fingers against his slack wrist. Yes, the pulse still beat, though faintly. Laying him back against the cushions So-so climbed out of the car and gathered a handful of snow. She rubbed it on his face, chafed his wrists with it, and drew a long breath of relief when the color began to ebb into his face again.

So-so persisted for what seemed a long time before he opened his eyes, gave a long sigh, and then smiled vaguely at her.

"Just rest, Fred," So-so said soothingly.

"Whiskey—under seat, back of car," he whispered.

So-so tore open the door in back, reached for the whiskey with trembling hands and held the bottle to his pale lips. He made an effort, swallowed a small amount, then gagged and choked over it. Almost immediately his face resumed its normal color. He straightened himself in the seat and smiled reassuringly at the frightened girl.

"Never mind, So-so, dear. I'm all right now. Give me another minute. Heart went back on me—bren good back on me now and live for a couple of months." He relaxed against the seat again, closing his eyes.

So-so stared at him like one in a nightmare. Thoughts whirled in her mind, Fred—the flight—heart trouble—danger—Jerry. All was confusion and she forced her mind to remain blank while Fred gathered strength to talk to her finally he motioned her again to the seat beside him and began to talk, a little jerkily at first gaining strength and coherence as he went on.

"Two months ago—first attack. Went to see a doctor—Jerry doesn't know. Doctor said I had to be careful, gave me some medicine, got better then."

"But, Fred, you can't go on this flight with your heart this way. Why suppose this should happen while you're in the air—"

"Don't So-so. It won't happen. I won't let it. Jerry mustn't know. Do you hear me, So-so? Jerry mustn't know."

"But, Fred, I must tell Jerry—you must tell him yourself. It's crazy, it's suicide to go when you are in this shape."

"Be quiet and listen to me, So-so. I'm going on this trip and you're going to keep this thing a secret. One of the chief reasons I have these attacks in getting excited, I'm too old a hand in the air to get excited at anything that happens aboard the Golden Girl. I'll have myself under absolute control from the moment we start until the moment we land. There isn't one thing to worry about."

"Let me finish, So-so. Who could take my place at this late date? All our lives, since we took up aviation together, Jerry and I have dreamed of a flight like this. It's our big chance. We can't give it up now."

"The danger—"

"The danger you're thinking of doesn't exist. I tell you I won't have another attack, probably for several weeks. I'm going through with it and you can't stop me. It means more than life itself to me, this flight."

"But Jerry—"

"Fred set his chin and turned to look directly at So-so. "Don't be unfair, So-so," he said sternly. "I love Jerry more than a brother. It's unthinkable that I should willingly take a chance with his life. I am positive that we shall complete the flight successfully. It's rotten luck that this should have happened to-day, and yet in a way it's good luck, for after such an attack there is a certain amount of resistance developed against the next one. I'm perfectly safe for several weeks."

He was desperately in earnest and So-so was more than half convinced.

"Are you sure, Fred, terribly, terribly sure? Think what it means before you answer."

"I'm terribly, terribly, sure, So-so. I'd have to be. It isn't my life, it's Jerry's and all his hopes, and all my hopes, too. Don't doubt me, So-so."

So-so looked steadily at the road. In her mind a decision was forming. She took one of Fred's hands and held it in both of hers. "Fred—if you will give up this trip—let Jerry get another navigator, it won't take more than a week—I'll marry you, now today."

He jerked his hand away, "Marry me because you are afraid Jerry will be hurt? No, thank you."

"No, Fred, no. Not just that. That's part of it, I admit. But part of it is for you, Fred. I know how brave you are, how fine, I can't bear to think of your fighting the wind and fog outside, and your own self inside the cabin. Give it up, Fred. Let me make you happy—let us see Jerry off together, wait for his return together."

why we can be married yet this afternoon—"

Fred shook his head, "It's no use, So-so. I'm going on this trip. If you'll marry me the day I come back I'll be the happiest man alive. If you had promised me this even a week ago I'd have told you and asked your advice, but it's too late now. We'll take off together tomorrow morning, Jerry and I."

Tears streamed down Solange's face, "Oh, Fred, please, please."

He patted the back of her head, "Don't cry, So-so. Everything will be all right, have a heart stimulant to use, I'll take a strong dose of it before we go. That alone would keep me going for forty-eight hours."

"Trust my judgement, So-so. I'd be a murderer if I placed Jerry in the danger you are imagining. Look how much better I am. I'm going to drive the car back, you don't think I'd do it if I thought there was any danger—with you in it, So-so?"

"Somehow this convinced So-so more than anything else he had said. She knew too well Fred's devotion for her, knew that he would sooner lay down his life than place hers in danger. Slowly she raised her head and dried her eyes.

"All right, Fred. I'll trust your judgement—but I think you should tell Jerry, just what you've told me. If I know him he will say go a head just the same, but he'll be prepared if anything does happen to you."

Fred shook his head, "No, Jerry would think of nothing but the danger to me of this trip. It would spoil his nerve, he's on a hair trigger now. You've got to promise me, So-so that you won't breathe a word of this to Jerry. I don't want you to come down to see us off tomorrow. We've said good-by, you an' I, let's do the rest of this like sensible people—like Connie and Jerry."

"All right, Fred—but I wish you would change your mind."

"I won't—we're going to go in a minute, give me your hand, So-so. She placed her hand in his. "Promise me by your good right hand that you won't say or do anything that would alarm Jerry, promise."

"I promise not to say or do anything that would alarm Jerry," So-so said in a small voice, "and I promise you, too, that when you come back I will marry you."

Fred bent and kissed her tenderly. "That's better than a thousand bottles of tonic, So-so. I'll just have to carry through now, honey. Tell me, So-so," his voice was wistful, "is even a little part of that promise just for me, because you care for me, even a little?"

"The biggest part of that promise is because I care for you, not a little, but a very great deal." So-so said steadily, and for the moment she meant it. Fred's peril was still uppermost in her mind and mingled with it admiration for his courage in carrying on.

They drove home very silently. At her gate Fred held her hands tightly for a moment and said, "I won't see you again until we return, So-so. I'm going back to my room now and go to sleep. We're starting at 3, Jerry says. I won't telephone you. I want to take this memory with me, you hands in mine, your voice in my ears. You won't keep me waiting long when I come back, will you So-so?"

"I won't keep you waiting at all, Fred."

"Then in two weeks at the longest you will be my wife. That is a promise, my darling."

He kissed her gently. Through blinding tears So-so saw him get back into the car and drive away. Like a mad thing she ran into the house, Chloe was away. So-so stood in the middle of the living-room, hands clenched, brain whirling. She must save them—some way—Jerry and Fred, alone over the water over high mountains, waste country—they must not go. She thought of Constance, Constance would help, Constance would stop them.

Without taking off her wraps she telephoned for a taxi. She would catch the 5 o'clock train to New York. Constance would be home. "Thank God, he didn't make me promise not to tell Constance," So-so thought wildly, while she waited for the cab.

"Eastern Hosiery wears better, wash better and fits better than any stocking I have ever worn."
"Eastern Stockings cannot be beaten. Not only do they outlast any other stocking, but they always retain their original smooth, silky appearance."
"A good wearing, perfect fitting, pleasurable stocking—in a hose."
"The wearing qualities of Eastern Hosiery are splendid."
"Eastern Hosiery wears, wash and look well—and they fit so neatly around the ankles."
"The quality and the appearance of Eastern Hosiery are all that could be desired."
"I have, at last, found a stocking that wears."

BEFORE going into the manufacture of a $2.00 Full Fashioned Silk Stocking, we made a critical and painstaking study of every popular brand on the market, noting carefully the good and bad qualities of each (as we saw them). Fortified, therefore, with particulars of the faults and virtues of these brands—correcting the one and emphasizing the other where we could—I then gave the signal to set our machines in motion. Each new stocking as it came off the machine was critically inspected by men who have spent their lives in the manufacture of high grade silk hosiery. Each new stocking was subjected to special machine, washing, and colour tests, until we felt certain we had, at last, produced the perfect $2.00 silk stockings for women. But, even then, I was not content. So this is what we did: we selected one thousand representative Canadian Women and submitted these stockings for a severe wearing test. Here is the result:

97.3% reported Eastern Full Fashioned Silk Stockings the equal or superior of any that they had ever worn.
76.4% of these declared that these stockings were the best they had ever worn.

"To my knowledge no other silk hosiery has been subjected to such a severe test, and it is gratifying to be able to state that Eastern Hosiery has been 'tested and approved' by Canadian Women."
