Get Fashionable Frills and Fashionable Fluffs

(By Carolyn Sherman Bailey)

Still blustering and cold, and yet spring is on its way making every girl feel that she wants to dress up for it. Old frocks seem twice as old on early spring days. But why not try to trim them a little? You may be able to make them look like new.

Fluffs and Frills

For a while no one wore collars, and cuffs on dresses, but they are in fashion now. Straight strips of net edged with tating, blue and pink organdy rucked and edged with blue or pink tating, collars and cuffs for a blue serge dress made of pale blue and white gingham in a fine check, or of yellow gingham, and a sailor collar of coarse white linen embroidered in the corners in colored cross stitch! These will do wonders for that winter school dress.

And go make some ruffles for the neck and wrists of your best dress. Organdy in white or colors, net edged with narrow lace or narrow ruffles of colored satin or taffeta will be ever so pretty.

Ribbon Accessories

Narrow ribbon in bright Roman stripes or a plaid design will make a trimming for a plain serge dress. Fasten it with coarse stitches to the neck of the dress, leaving some rather long ends. Turn the under in points, and attach a large bead to each point the color that predominates in the ribbon.

Ribbon flowers are easily made. Gather two-inch lengths or rose colored taffeta ribbon, two inches wide, into petal shape. Sew four or five of these together in flower shape, and frill the centre with yellow silk knots. This makes a ribbon flower to wear at the neck of your party dress.

ODDS AND ENDS

Belts are semi-fitted. "Poison green" is a favorite color. Feather dresses are much in vogue. Accordion-plaited insertions may be used to give the prevailing style fullness.

"My Lady of the Scarf"

My lady and her scarf confronts us everywhere, neck scarfs, proud ones, sporting scarfs, striped scarfs, silkies, scarfs filled with merit, shouting out with joy to all they meet, others so brimming over with color and the country that as we pass the stones give place to a flower garden. But the queen of the scarfs for the moment is the very-broad, supple, hand-knit beauty, which is made to match cozy knitted frocks and short little jumpers.

These scarfs are fully 24 inches wide, and very long, and whatever patterns dance round the hem of the frock or jumper also grace the ends of the scarf with long fringe beneath to set them off.

It is not the scarf alone that attracts our admiration, but the new trim manner of wearing it. No more do scarfs slip and slide and fly off when the breeze plays with them around the corners. They are far too dignified for such distressing antics, being now worn Victorian-wise pulled through a broad patent leather belt beyond it, and forming a little frill beyond it, and the ends are clasped firmly in place in front beneath this restraining band, and hang down most demurely nearly to the hem of the dress.

Such a smart capelike effect is produced by scarfs worn in this manner, just the very thing to add a little warmth, when the spring wind is cold, and they are quite easily made by the home knitter. If, and the "if" is a big one, she is clever enough to knit the dress to match. These scarf-sets also accompany the abbreviated jumper, which is to be seen on all sides. One very pretty one was of white wool, with a double border of bright violet squares, done in raised stitch, looking like threaded ribbon, and the same border was repeated on the jumper worn over a white serge skirt. This scarf was kept in place by the black shiny belt. With a vivid violet hat, the whole formed a complete costume, which any ordinary knitter could easily have copied.

Another very smart frock was dark blue striped with dull petunia to within 12 inches of the hem, where a broad border of blue—decorated with large alternating "scrolls" and "diamonds" of petunia—finished off the skirt, which was filled into its quaint knitted bodice upon which the pattern appeared again at the neck in diminished form and round the short sleeves. Its scarf of blue wool was entwined by the same border.

Another frock was of beige-colored wool, wonderfully knitted in a very close stitch almost like fabric, and its "finishing touch" consisted of medallions of white "brushed" wool placed round the hem, just in front of the neck and at the ends of the scarf.

Very striking was a new model of white wool, with bodice and full skirt effect, and spread across the bodice was a wide heraldic design in black which was repeated round the hem and of course, up on the scarf, which had a few rows of black knitting right round it, almost like an edging. The "Russian" multi-colored stripes appeared upon a black silk knitted robe, forming a border around the skirt of scarlet, blue, green and purple in narrow row bands while the bodice had a roll collar of the same striped work. In this instance the scarf was fastened by a wide scarlet leather belt and a shiny rough straw hat of jet black red.

Considered the whole an exceedingly handsome "afternoon" turn out.

One more very uncommon frock, "princess" form this time, was of soft gray without a border, relying for distinction upon an "apron" effect in the center of the skirt, up to the back, done in basket or trellis stitch in lemon yellow, outlined by a single stitch of black, with a tiny edge of lemon and black around neck and sleeves. In this case the scarf for a change was lemon color and bordered with black fringe—the belt was black.

Fur "stoles" are also worn in this manner with broad belts, though as a rule they are not wide enough to be caught down at the back, and the feather ones, which promise to be so popular a little later on, will doubtless also find a belt awaiting them.

Frozen Fish Will Soon Decline

The trade reports an active season, and there has been, since the beginning of the Lenten season, a decidedly active business. Prices on frozen fish will tend to decline as soon as the cold weather is broken, and this may come at any time. There is now a good sale for salt, pickled and canned fish. Oysters are coming to hand better, and lobsters, too, are a little better and will be lower in price ere long. Green codfish is now very scarce.

THE HUMAN DUD

(American Legion Weekly)

While he was making his way about his platoon one dark night a sergeant heard the roar of a "G. I. Can" overhead, and dived into a shell-hole. It was already occupied by a private, who was hit full in the wind by the non-com's head. A moment's silence—a long, deep breath, and then:

"Good Lord, is that you, Sarge?"

"That's me."

"Thank Heaven! I was just waiting for you to explode."

"Oh," responded the porter, "that's to try your temper."

REAL PRESENCE OF MIND

They had been telling stories of presence of mind shown at fires. At the conclusion of one story a man said:—"I heard of a big fire, and I strolled out to see it. I found an old gentleman half out of the fourth-floor window, gesticulating and calling for help. Everyone seemed paralyzed. No ladder or escape could reach him; the crowd said he must be burnt to death. I rushed forward and said, "He shall not. I called for a rope and threw him the end. He caught it. I told him to tie the end round his waist. He did so, and then I pulled him down. Gentlemen, it is true he broke his neck in the fall, but after all, I saved him from being burned to death."

Woman Chooses

"Men buy automobiles—but it is the woman who chooses them." This is the expert judgment of Edward S. Jordan, manufacturer of motor cars, veteran sales manager and generally qualified to speak on the subject, which he does in the February issue of Motor.

Mr. Jordan then proceeds to consider just what a car must have to "get across" with the woman in the home, the final arbiter of whatever is bought. "First," says he, "the car must have good lines, for a woman has a peculiar appreciation of lines. She knows their value in her own figure and in her surroundings. She can appreciate symmetry of design and she knows when anything has that peculiar quality we call 'balance'.

"Then the color must be right, for a woman knows what color is. She has an instinctive sense of color, of the appropriateness of color schemes, not possessed by the male animal.

"If the lines are good, if the color is right, if the car has an atmosphere of refinement, the woman begins to like that car with her first look. So she steps up to it and her first physical act is to put her hand on the leather. If it is soft and pleasing to the touch, if it is carefully laid on, the car scores a second point.

"Next the woman steps in and sits down. If the maker has studied the average height of a person, if he has tilted his seat at a comfortable angle, if the springs are deep and yielding and the arm rest is just right, if the woman feels she is settling down to ride in the car instead of on it—then she begins to enjoy herself. She looks more carefully at the fittings, the rug on the floor, the artistic hardware. She is glad to see whatever un-
