THE POOR MAN'S UTILITY. It is patent to all observers that the railway in the last year or two is patronized only by the poorer classes. The rich and middle class do not use the trains at all; they travel in their autos. Auto owners do not use the railway at all. They don't have to. Now there is a move to increase the passenger rates one half cent a mile to make up for the coming increase in wages of the R. M. men. Surely the second class fares—the poor man's coach—will not be further increased.
