WHAT IS HAPPENING THE SALVATION ARMY

LONDON, Feb. 1.—(By The Canadian Press)—Writing of the crisis in the affairs of the Salvation Army "One Who Knows" in the British Weekly, says:

"Such things will happen. But it would be a sad and pitiful thing were the Salvation Army so to act as to tear itself to pieces before the face of all people.

"I bring no charge of conspiracy against the seven Commissioners who summoned the High Council. I do not doubt that they have the interest of the Army at their hearts, nor do I question that they are entirely unselfish and quite logically convinced in their determination to effect a drastic change in the Army's autocracy. But the fact remains they have taken this revolutionary step, at a time when their autocrat is not merely defenseless, but when he is so desperately ill as to be entirely ignorant of what is afoot.

"The inevitable consequence of this action is to spread dismay and confusion through all ranks of the Army. It does not matter how many are for the Commissioners and how many are against them; the stubborn and alarming fact discloses itself that there is a division in the Army. What ever happens it is now as certain as the existence of oil and water that the old loyalty for its leaders which distinguished the Army for 50 years has suffered a shock, and that in consequence the stability of the whole structure may be shaken. Many people, perhaps, do not realize that this in its ramifications, is the creation of the man who lies so tragically stricken in a cottage on the Suffolk coast. William Booth, his father, was the creator of all that boundless enthusiasm which led to the formation of the Army, but Bramwell, working ceaselessly and silently in the shadow of that picturesque personality, was the organizer of victory. He it was who built up and consolidated the extraordinary structure which startled people from the first by its solidity, and he it was who quietly and persistently controlled the statesmanship of the organization when it was powerfully attacked by public men of great eminence and sensationally deserted by members of General Booth's own family. Bramwell Booth, it should be clearly known, is not merely the second General of the Salvation Army, but its original organizer, its only statesman, and in truth its first autocrat.

"What pains me more than anything else in the present situation of the Army is the future of those faithful, devoted and humble officers who for years and for so small a pittance, have served the cause of righteousness in the darkest places of our industrial civilization. I feel that the lives of these people, particularly the women, have ennobled the Salvation Army and won for it the respect, the sympathy, and affection of multitudes who dislike its theology and feel a certain repugnance for its more puritanic methods of propaganda. That these devoted and loyal friends of the poor should be caught up into the politics of the movement seems to me altogether deplorable, and I hope that whatever steps the High Council may decide to take will not involve them in suffering and loss.

"But we are confronted by one definite danger to the organization of the Salvation Army which must, I think, have a far-reaching effect on the whole body. For many years the rich and powerful branch of the Army in America, with millions of capital, has been restive under the tutelage of England. Only the perfect tact and occasional subservience of Bramwell Booth have prevented that great body of the Army from declaring its independence and going its own way under the leadership of his sister Evangeline. For example, if Bram-

A COLLISION—While Mr. James Brady was driving along Prince Street in his car shortly before 1 o'clock yesterday, a double team coming down Sydney Street driven by a Mr. McFadyen of West River, collided with him, badly damaging the radiator, hood and running board of his car. The collision which was purely accidental was caused by the icy street.

PROMOTION—Mr. Arthur P. Russell, Executive Vice-President of the New Haven Railroad has announced the appointment of W. H. Wright as one of his assistants. Mr. Wright, who has been promoted from the position of manager of the Boston Terminal Company, is married to a niece of Miss Florrie Cairns, Charlottetown.

FUNERAL SERVICES—The funeral of the late Patrick Walsh which was largely attended was held Sunday afternoon from his late residence, 92 Hillsboro street, to Saint Dunstan's Cathedral, where service was conducted by Rev. F. McQuaid. The pall bearers were: Messrs. Alfred Egan, Cornelius Corrigan, Percy McNevin, Arthur Bruce, George Chandler and Ronald MacDonald. Rev. F. McQuaid conducted the service at the grave.

FIRE ALARM—Yesterday at noon the fire department responded to an alarm of fire turned in by reason of a blaze on the roof of a double tenement house on Sydney Street on the premises occupied by Mr. A. Howatt. After some chopping and cutting, and the use of the chemical extinguisher, the fire was put out without further damage. Before the first Railway Station was built in this city, this house was used to house the railway offices, these being located in one half of it and the chief clerk's residence in the other. After the offices were removed the tenement was occupied by the late Mr. Harry Houle, who at that time had a contract on the building of the Railway Station, later being appointed Track Master.

well had ordered his sister to take up a command in India or Australia it is safe to say that the whole Army in America might have risen to defy his order and break the link with England. That is to say, his autocracy never ventured to cross the Atlantic.

"But will America maintain the unity of the Army if one of the innovating English Commissioners is elected General, or if a committee is elected to manage its affairs from Queen Victoria street? I do not think so. I think that mutiny of this kind would be followed by division at home and the whole body would soon find itself paralyzed by disunion. The Army became a mighty thing first because the English nation and then the whole world fell under the spell of William Booth's magnificent appearance and his obvious sincerity; it grew in wealth, power and prestige, because Bramwell Booth mastered and guided its enthusiasm, established a business-like intimacy with the rich and charitable, and maintained the Booth tradition. Let him go, let quarrelsomeness and fractiousness appear at headquarters, let America break away and half the Army in England declare for the Booths and half for a new form of leadership, and the public, shocked and scandalized, will regretfully conclude the Army is no longer that great body of devoted men and women who up to this moment have given their lives so singlemindedly to save the lost and befriend the homeless.

"The only person who could save the Army from this calamitous end, if such a man may be found in its ranks, is one who by a real love of the old General and by a real faith in the Booth tradition could stamp out the smouldering embers of mutiny and persuade the Army to continue its original autocracy until a more peaceful hour has arrived for reconsidering the whole question of leadership."

AT ROTARY—At the Rotary luncheon yesterday, Rotarian G. Gordon Hughes was in the chair. The speaker was Rotarian Ernest A. Foster, who read a paper prepared by Rotarian Hughes and entitled "Where Do Drugs Come From?" They come from the drugstore, it was pointed out, but before that the druggist gets them from the wholesaler, and the latter gets his crude material from the uttermost parts of the earth. The story of the obtaining of these materials reads like a lesson in geography. Using an illustration of a compound licorice mixture, the speaker mentioned the various ingredients and told where these were obtained. "When you buy," he said, "a cough mixture or lozenges you buy an interesting combination of commercial city of Quebec.

DOMINION SOCIAL HYGIENE COUNCIL—During the meeting of the Canadian Medical Association held in this city last July, Dr. Gordon Bates, Secretary of the Dominion Social Hygiene Council of Canada, discussed the question of the formation of a Provincial branch with a number of local members of the Medical profession. Jenkins was appointed president and Dr. F. W. Tidmarsh, Secretary Treasurer. Dr. H. D. Johnson was appointed chairman of the business management committee and Dr. P. A. Creelman secretary. A group of six laymen, three from the Rotary Club and three from Gyro will be chosen, and these together with the above mentioned officers, will constitute an executive of ten. The object of the Society is the dissemination of knowledge relative to public health matters, more particularly in regard to social diseases. It is intended to give a series of Radio talks on general health topics. Prince Edward Island is the last province to organize a branch of the Dominion Social Hygiene Council, all the other Provinces having had one for some years past.

ANIMALS OF LONG AGO

II. MONSTERS OF THE SEA

The sea which used to cover much of Kansas and nearby states, has long since passed away. Where it is, to be men now find the remains of ocean monsters which lived many millions of years ago.

A monster sea-turtle as conceived by an artist.

Among those monsters was one with jaws like those of a crocodile. Its body was like a giant lizard, except that it had "flippers" instead of feet. This monster sometimes grew to a length of 40 feet. It had sharp teeth, with which to seize fish. A fish six feet long would hardly have been a square meal for that fellow.

In the Kansas sea was another strange animal—a turtle which sometimes grew to a length of 12 feet. Its head was two or three feet long, but you may be sure that it did not have a great deal of brains. None of the animals I am speaking about had more brains than just enough to get along with!

Ocean waters used to flow over Maryland. When that state became dry land, it still contained the remains of a shark-like fish, the largest fish that ever lived. The remains were first discovered during the past century. They are chiefly in the form of teeth, but just from the teeth, scientists can tell a great deal about what the fish must have been like. It was of the shark family, and is believed to have been at least 60 feet long. Its mouth must have been large enough to swallow one of the giant turtles. If it ever tried such a meal, the shell may have been hard on its digestion.

Those mighty sharks have also left their remains in states bordering on the Gulf of Mexico. They must have been feared by everything else in the sea. The only ocean animal which has ever beaten them in size is the modern whale—which is a mammal, not a fish.

Water as Foil to Gas-Attack

People may be protected from poison gas raids during a war by shields of water played over roofs of houses, declares a French expert. He would have pipes placed on all roofs, and says the water would neutralize the effects of the gas and thus spare the occupants of the buildings.
